FOREIGN QUARTERINGS IN LANCASHIRE SHIELDS.

By the Rev. Andrew E. P. Gray, M.A., Rector of Wallasey.

(Read 24th February, 1887.)

THE ennobled families of England are, for the most part, thoroughly English, and very few drops of foreign blood flow in their veins. Some, however, of the marriages of our princes in days long gone by have transmitted to their representatives amongst the nobility and gentry of to-day foreign quarterings not unworthy to be placed side by side with the Lilies and Lions of the Plantagenets. Thus Isabel, wife of Edmund Duke of York, (a younger son of Edward III., and great grandfather of Edward IV.,) was co-heir of Peter the Cruel, King of Castile and Leon, who was the descendant (in the fifth generation) of S. Ferdinand King of Castile and his wife Beatrice, the daughter and co-heir of Philip of Hohenstaufen, Emperor-elect, and Irene, who was heir to the claims of her father the Byzantine Emperor Isaac II. (Angelos-Komnênos) : all the numerous representatives of the House of York can therefore quarter the castle and lion of Castile and Leon, the three lions of Hohenstaufen, and the black and golden eagles of the western and eastern Empires. Some of the families, who claim these royal and imperial quarterings, are connected with Lancashire, but royal descents have been so much brought forward of late that we need not trace these families in this paper. Some genealogists appear to think it all-important to trace descents from any royalty, as though the rank of our forefathers were more to be thought of than the worth : those, who have in their veins the blood of the House of York, can not be proud of all their kingly ancestors, but may point with complacency to the corner of their shield, where the black lions of Hohenstaufen look the spectator full in the face, for Philip, the Emperor-elect, who has been already mentioned, was a son of one of the noblest in the long list of Cæsars, Frederick Barbarossa.

Passing by these quarterings, the course of which down to the present time may be traced with little difficulty by any one interested in the subject, we will turn our attention to a marriage (which took place about the year 1437) between an English commoner and a duchess, who, though her title was English, was a foreigner. We ought indeed to confess that the marriage was "a runaway match," and the happy husband, Sir Richard Wydvile, was fined £1000 for his elopement with Jacquetta of Luxemburg (for that was the lady's name), the widow of his late commander, John Duke of Bedford, brother to Henry V. Sir Richard was afterwards restored to royal favour, made a Knight of the Garter, and advanced to the dignity of Earl Rivers; his daughter became Queen of England, and his kinsfolk presumed to rival the Nevills, whose power at that time almost or quite overshadowed the Plantagenets; this rivalry brought poor Lord Rivers to the block, and left Jacquetta a widow for the second time. Genealogists, interested in Lancashire families, may well be grateful to Sir Richard for aspiring to the hand of Jacquetta of Luxemburg, for the shield that she (being her father's heir) passed on to her children, consisted of twelve illustrious quarterings, which now find a place in the "achievements" of four families closely connected with this county, viz.,—

1. Grey, Earl of Stamford (and, until 1882, of Warrington);
2. Egerton, Earl of Ellesmere;
3. Woodcock, of Newburgh and Wigan;
4. Stanley, Earl of Derby.

Of these four families, the first is not resident within the county, but holds land in it, and may therefore be reckoned as a Lancashire family for the purposes of this paper; the second has been identified for some generations with the development of the industries of the county: the third is a cadet branch of the Woodcocks, of Cuerden Green, in the parish of Leyland, whose land passed in the direct male line from the reign of Henry III. to the end of the last century, when an heiress transmitted it to the Winstanleys (now of Chaigeley Manor, near Clitheroe), by whom it was sold: of the fourth, the Stanleys, it is as needless to give any further description, as it was unnecessary for Moses to define the fourth branch of the River of Paradise, any more than by stating its well-known name.

Jacquetta's twelve quarterings are these :—

1. Luxemburg (Counts of S. Pol).—Argent, a lion rampant with the tail nowed Gules, armed and crowned Or, langued Azure, a label of three points of the last.
2. Chatillon (Counts of S. Pol).—Gules, 3 pales Vair, on a chief Or a label of five points Azure.
3. Brienne (Counts of Jaffa, &c.)—Azure, semèe of billets and a lion rampant Or.
4. Sicily.—(The present writer is ignorant of the arms of the Norman kings of Sicily; the black eagle was not used till the days of the Hohenstaufen. Some Crusading kinsmen of the Norman kings bore plain "Gules," but he does not know whether this simple shield was adopted by the royal branch of the family.)
5. Lusignan (Kings of Cyprus).—Barry of ten Argent and Azure, a lion rampant with the tail fourchée Gules, armed and crowned Or, langued of the second.
6. Champagne.—Azure, a bend Argent, double cotised Or.
7. Jerusalem.—Argent, a cross potent between four crosslets Or. (This "false heraldry" of metal upon metal was deliberately allowed in the one case of the arms of the Sacred City.)
8. Komnênos (Emperors at Constantinople).—Gules, a double-headed eagle displayed, crowned, Or, in chief a consecrated wafer duly marked Argent. (This is the famous Σταυραετός of the Eastern Empire.)

9. De la Roche (Dukes of Athens).—Gules, a cross Ermine, the centre voided of the field.
10. De Baux (Dukes of Andria).—Gules, a star of sixteen rays Argent.
11. Orsini (of Rome).—Bendy of six Argent and Gules, a fess Or, on a chief of the first, a rose of the second.
12. Luxemburg. As No 1.

It will be best for us to prove Jacquetta's right to these quarterings, (treating the shield synthetically rather than analytically,) and then to go on to trace the claims of Greys, Egertons, Woodcocks, and Stanleys to a place amongst her representatives.

I.—*John Komnênos, perhaps the greatest and best of the Emperors of the East, was the eldest son of the well-known Emperor Alexis I., and reigned from 1118 to 1143: his goodness has been handed down in the composition of the name by which he is commonly known, just in the same way as the greatness of the restorer of the Western Empire has formed a permanent addition to his name; as the latter is in France called Charlemagne, i.e., Charles the Great, so the former is known in the east as Kalojoannes, i.e., John the Good. His grandson John, who, though not emperor, was the head of the House of Komnênos, left two or three daughters as his co-heirs, who transmitted to various families in the west a right to bear on their shields the golden eagle of the Eastern Empire. Sir B. Burke in his Peerage traces the descent of Charlotte de la Tremouille, wife of the great Earl of Derby, from the Emperor Alexis Komnênos through a line which gave to her children no claim to representation, and no right to quarter the imperial eagle; but there is no mention of the fact that her husband was descended from the same Alexis Komnênos, and was even entitled to place that emperor's arms on his shield. It ought perhaps to be here mentioned that the description given above of the arms of the Byzantine emperors is taken from an article on the subject in the Greek periodical Ἑστία, published at Athens, where it is stated that the Komnênian

* The writer desires to record his gratitude for the invaluable help that he has received from his friend, Miss McPherson, of the Lodge, Blundellsands, in tracing the ancestry, and marshalling the achievement, of Jacquetta of Luxemburg

Cæsars were the first to double the eagle's head; other writers speak of "campo vermiglio e aquila di oro."

Maria Komnêna, one of the daughters and co-heirs of the last mentioned John, the head of that highly gifted race, married in 1164 (and not in 1167, as Ducrange says), Amauri, King of Jerusalem, the half-brother of Geoffrey Plantagenet, who was father of our Henry II. Isabel, the only child of King Amauri and the Komnênian princess, was married three times, her third husband being Henry, Count of Champagne, jure uxoris King of Jerusalem. Alice, the heir of Henry and Isabel, married Hugh de Lusignan, King of Cyprus, who also styled himself King of Jerusalem. When his grandson, Hugh II., died childless in 1253, the representation of the family was carried on by the issue of the daughters of Hugh I., of whom the younger, Mary ("a wondrous good lady," according to de Joinville), married Walter de Brienne, Count of Jaffa, who was taken prisoner by the Saracens and murdered by them in 1245, because he refused to give up Jaffa for his ransom. He was the son of Walter Count de Brienne and Mary the daughter and heir of Tancred, King of Sicily; and his uncle, John de Brienne, King of Jerusalem and eventually Emperor at Constantinople, was one of the heroes of the thirteenth century, and is well known to all readers of the history of that period. It would be interesting to linger over the details of the history of the great Crusading families of Lusignan and de Brienne, but this paper is genealogical and not historical, and must keep itself within bounds, lest our brook (like that of the Son of Sirach) should become a river, and our river become a sea. We must pass on, therefore, and merely mention that Hugh de Brienne, the son of Walter Count of Jaffa and Mary de Lusignan, married Isabel de la Roche, the heiress of the Dukes of Athens of that name—a dynasty that will not have been forgotten by readers of Gibbon. Walter, Duke of Athens, the son of Hugh and Isabel, was killed by the Catalans in 1311, leaving a son Walter (who was killed at the Battle of Poitiers and left no issue), and a daughter Isabel, who married Walter d'Enghien. Their son Louis, titular Duke of Athens, left a daughter and heir, Margaret, who married John of Luxemburg, grandson of Guy of Luxemburg and Matilda, the heiress of the Chatillons, Counts of S. Pol. Peter, Count of S. Pol, the son and heir of John of Luxemburg, became the husband of Margaret, the daughter (and eventually the heir) of Francis de Baux, Duke of Andria. The House of Baux was a very ancient and powerful family in Provence, and claimed descent from the Balti, the kingly race of the Visigoths: one branch of it held the Principality of Orange till 1393, and from it all the later princes of Orange were descended; the other branch (which was the elder line of the family) held the Duchy of Andria till the fifteenth century. The mother of Margaret de Baux was Justine Orsini, an heiress of the Roman family of that name. At the head of the nobility of the Eternal City stood for centuries the great houses of Orsini and Colonna, rivals in power and equals in renown,—the latter devoted to the interests of the empire, the former ever faithful to the Papacy; indeed three of its members have sat in the Chair of S. Peter, viz., Celestine III. (1191-1198), Nicholas III. (1277-1280), and Benedict XIII. (1724-1730). Even cursory students of Italian history know something of the Orsini, and the race, that fortified the ruined theatre of Marcellus as their chief stronghold, and that commenced the building of the Vatican, still flourishes in Rome, where its head has the rank and prerogatives of a foreign prince, whilst he claims the title of "cousin of "the king" at three of the courts of Europe. But we may not trace the history of the houses of de Baux and Orsini any more than that of the Lusignans and de Briennes. Jacquetta of Luxemburg was the daughter and heir of Peter, Count of S. Pol, by Margaret de Baux, and thus passed on to her representatives the twelve quarterings of which we have spoken.

II.—It therefore only remains to prove the right of the Lancashire families already mentioned to a place amongst Jacquetta's representatives. She left five sons (all of whom died without issue), and seven daughters, her co-heirs.

1. The eldest of these, Elizabeth Wydvile, married twice; her first husband was Sir John Grey, of Groby, a member of a great family which rose to eminence at the beginning of the 13th century and for a moment touched the Throne itself 300 years later. There was a Parliament in the reign of Henry VII. to which some forty lay Peers were summoned, and out of this number five were Greys, viz., Thomas, Marquis of Dorset (son of Sir John); George, Earl of Kent; Reginald, Lord Grey of Wilton; Henry, Lord Grey of Codnor; and Edward, Viscount Lisle (a younger brother of Sir John). Sir John Grey left by his wife Elizabeth, the eldest co-heir of Jacquetta of Luxemburg, a son, Thomas Grey, K.G., the already mentioned Marquis of Dorset; whose son, the second Marquis, had with other issue four sons; of these four, the eldest, Henry, was created Duke of Suffolk, and was the father of Lady Jane Grey; he and his two next brothers, Thomas and Leonard, were beheaded in those troublous Tudor times, but the youngest, John, died quietly in 1564, leaving an only son, who was created by James I. Lord Grey of Groby, and whose grandson was advanced by Charles I. to the Earldom of Stamford. The great-grandson of the first Lord Stamford married, in 1736, Lady Mary Booth, daughter and heir of George, Earl of Warrington, and thus began the connection between the Greys and Lancashire, which has now lasted for 150 years. There were three sons of this marriage; the eldest was created Earl of Warrington, but this title expired in 1882; and the present head of this ancient House is descended from John, the youngest son of the marriage that brought the Greys into the list of Lancashire freeholders.

2. Sir John Grey was killed (at the early age of 25) at the battle of St. Albans, 1460, and his widow Elizabeth, Jacquetta's co-heir, afterwards became the wife of King Edward IV., as all readers of Shakespere will remember. The right of the Egertons, Earls of Ellesmere, to quarter the arms of Edward IV. is well known, and is sufficiently traced in the "Royal Lineage" of Burke's Peerage. They are a branch of the ducal house of Leveson Gower, and took the name of Egerton in 1833: their right to represent Edward IV. is derived from marriages with the heiresses of the houses of Egerton, Stanley, Clifford, Brandon, and Tudor, and so back to Henry VII. and his wife Elizabeth, Edward IV.'s heir.

3. We have seen that the Greys and the Egertons represent the two marriages of Elizabeth, Jacquetta's eldest co-heir. The Woodcocks of Newburgh and Wigan claim Jacquetta's quarterings through their descent from Anne, her third daughter, who married William Bourchier, eldest son of the Earl of Essex (a title that had descended to the Bourchiers from the great family of de Bohun). Cicely Bourchier, eventually the sole heir of this marriage, became the wife of John Devereux, Lord Ferrers, one of the representatives of the Palatine Earls of Chester. Barbara, the co-heir of Sir William Devereux, Lord Ferrers' grandson, married Sir Edward Hastings of Leicester Abbey, one of that house, which must be ranked in the forefront of English families, whether we regard the antiquity of its descent or the greatness of its deeds: moreover its heraldic achievement* could scarcely be surpassed, for on Sir Edward's Shield the Hastings sleeve was followed by the red balls of Courtenay, the intermingled black and gold of Pole, the many quarterings (noble, royal, and imperial) accumulated by the House of York, the silver saltire of Nevill, the red cross of Bigod, and many another historic "Coat." Walter Hastings, the great-grandson of Sir Edward, left two daughters co-heirs, one of whom, Jane, married, in 1706, Edward Holme, of Holland House, near Wigan; their grandson, another Edward Holme (who through his mother was a representative of the knightly house of Legh of Lyme) left three sons and four daughters, but all of these died childless, with the exception of Elizabeth, who passed on Jacquetta's quarterings with a multitude of others to her sons and their children, by her marriage, in 1799,

* Sir Edward Hastings' Shield may be thus marshalled :—Quarterly of 30, viz.. 1, Hastings; 2, Hungerford; 3, Courtenay; 4, Devon; 5, Meols; 6, Botreaux; 7, Pole; 8, Plantagenet (Clarence); 9, Provence; 10, Castile and Leon; 11, Hohenstaufen; 12, the Empire; 13, Mortimer; 14, Plantagenet (Clarence) ancient; 15, de Burgh; 16, Lacy; 17, Nevill; 18, Montacute; 19, Monthermer; 20, Holland; 21, Zouche; 22, Quinci; 23, Beaumont; 24, Plantagenet (Kent); 25, Wake; 26, Beauchamp; 27, Warwick; 28, Bigod; 29, de Spencer; 30, Clare. Barbara, Sir Edward's wife. added the following quarterings to the Hastings' achievement :—1, Devereux; 2, Ferrers; 3, Ferrers (ancient); 4, Chester; 5, Bourchier; 6, Plantagenet (Gloucester); 7, Bohun; 8, Mandeville; 9, Braose; 10, Marshall; 11, Clare (Pembroke); 12, Badlesmere; 13, Wydvile; 14, Luxemburg; 15, Chatillon; 16, Brienne; 17, Sicily; 18, Lusignan; 19, Champagne; 20, Jerusalem; 21, Komnenos; 22, de la Roche; 23, de Baux; 24, Orsini.

with Thomas Woodcock, banker, of Newburgh House, in the parish of Ormskirk, and of Bank House, Wigan.

4. The Stanleys have for centuries been acknowledged as pre-eminent amongst Lancashire families. They added the Luxemburg quarterings to their already famous "Harts' Heads," when George Stanley, who was so near losing his head on the eve of the battle of Bosworth, married Joan, the heir of Lord Strange and Jacquetta, the fourth daughter and co-heir of Jacquetta of Luxemburg. George Stanley, who thus became Lord Strange, was the son of the first Earl of Derby, and left (with other issue) two sons, of whom the elder was the forefather of the next nine Earls of Derby, and is now represented by the Duke of Athol, whilst the younger was the founder of the cadet branch of the family which inherited the Earldom, on the extinction of the male line of the elder branch in 1736, and from which the present Lord Derby is descended.

These descents are shortly given (especially in the cases of the better known families), for it would be out of place to set down in a concise article, as this must of necessity be, every step in such long genealogies. As it is, the paper appears to consist too much of mere strings of names: the purpose, however, with which it was begun has now been accomplished, and it has established the right of four Lancashire families to place in their shields some foreign coats of arms, of which even a Grey, a Hastings, or a Stanley may be proud.

NOTE.—Sir Gilbert Dethick, Garter King-of-Arms in Elizabeth's reign, mentions the following quarterings in the Stanley Shield:—Luxemburg, Chatillon, Lusignan, de Baux, and Orsini. Jacquetta's claim to represent the Kings of Cyprus and the Dukes of Athens is concisely given by the Bishop of Chester in his Lectures on Mediæval and Modern History, p. 205. The historical reader will not have forgotten the 62nd and 69th chapters of Gibbon's Decline and Fall, in which he gives a certain amount of information about the de la Roches, the de Briennes, and the Orsini;

there are three great branches of this last family still extant, viz., the Dukes of Gravina at Rome, the Counts d'Orbassan at Florence, and the Princes of Rosenberg in Carinthia. A very complete pedigree of the Komnênoi is given in Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Biography. The ancestry of the de Baux may be traced in Moreri's Dictionnaire Historique. Any good genealogical account of the families of Grey, Egerton, Hastings, and Stanley, will verify the statements made above as to the descendants of Jacquetta's co-heirs; Jane Hastings' descent was fully proved, when the male heir of her father's younger brother successfully claimed the Earldom of Huntingdon in 1819.

WINDLESHAW CHANTRY AND CEMETERY.

By the Rev. Austin Powell.

(Read 10th February, 1887.)

AT a distance of a little more than a mile from St. Helens is "Windleshaw Abbey." To English, and especially to Lancashire, Catholics it is a place of surpassing interest. They cannot be otherwise than deeply impressed when they gaze on the tower, hoary with age, on the few remaining stones of the chapel walls, on the vacant spot where erst stood the altar. But it is not to view the ruins of the little chapel that thither hie them, of a summer afternoon, groups formed of old and young, groups from near and afar. It is the graves within the ancient sanctuary and around it which are the chief objects of interest and regard. "To man alone of all animals," says Pliny, "is given the care of "sepulture," "uni, sepulturae curia." His soul being immortal, he cannot be indifferent to the spot where his body is to rest, until "this mortal must put on immortality."

Hence the interest which a ramble through a cemetery begets in the mind of a thoughtful man. "I doubt," says Longfellow, on visiting a beautiful Catholic cemetery, "whether any one can "enter this enclosure without feeling the religion of the place "steal over him, and seeing something of the dark and gloomy "expression pass off from the stern countenance of death."

In his "Lines written beneath an elm in the churchyard of "Harrow," Byron sings—

> "Oft have I thought 't would soothe my dying hour,
> If aught may soothe when life resigns her power;
> To know some humble grave, some narrow cell
> Would hide my bosom where it loved to dwell.
> With this fond dream methinks 't were sweet to die."

And Shelley in his preface to "Adonais, an elegy on the death of "John Keats," after picturing the romantic and lovely cemetery hard by the pyramid of Caius Cestius, adds—"It might make "one in love with death to think one should be buried in so "sweet a place." Far be it from me to pretend to apply this beautiful though fanciful utterance to the subject of the theme on which I am engaged. And yet I have known some whose dying hour has been soothed, when they have been assured that the old graveyard at Windleshaw would receive their remains. It is but a few months ago, that a youth, whose life was on the wane, pleaded passionately for a last resting-place there, and grew calm and resigned when his petition was granted. Not that there is anything grand or imposing or even beautiful in this quiet spot, where sleep the ἐθνεα νεκρῶν. Of granite there is but little, of marble there is none. Around one or two graves only is there iron railing; for pyramids and obelisks, vases and broken pillars, you may look in vain.

When Mr. Barrett, the antiquary of Manchester, who visited Windleshaw in 1780, wrote "the priests lie buried within the now "fallen chapel walls under handsome gravestones," his imaginative powers must have tinged with roseate hue the results of his observation. As with the priests, so with the laity, there is nothing obtrusive, nothing pompous.

> "Two grey stones at their head and feet,
> And the daisied turf between."

It is this modesty and simplicity which lends a charm to the place. To this we must add the feeling of veneration which is engendered when we look on anything ancient. Especially is this true when there is a connection between the past and the dead. Hence Cicero observes—"Statuae intereunt tempestate; . . . "sepulchrorum autem sanctitas in ipso solo est, quod nulla vi "moveri neque deleri potest; atque ut cetera extinguuntur, sic "sepulchra fiunt sanctiora vetustate."—Orationes Philipp. ix., c. 6.

The old cemetery at Windleshaw is in extent merely 39 yards from east to west, by 47 yards from north to south, thus containing 1830 square yards, that is somewhat less than two-fifths of an acre. A belt of chesnuts and elms encircled the little spot, some fourteen of which are still remaining. The number of graves is 615, nineteen of which are within the chapel walls.

Within this plot are the remains of the ancient Chantry. The tower at the west end is still standing. It is 36 feet high, and 12 feet square. The doorway is somewhat buried, as the earth has been gradually raised through the making of graves. In each side of the tower there is a window 5 feet high by some 3 feet in width. The mullion in the window on the east side has perished. There is also a second window on the west front, midway between the upper one and the doorway. It has also lost its mullion. Although small, the tower is strongly built, the walls being 3 feet 6 inches thick. Access was gained to the chantry from the tower, through a lofty archway, which thus allowed the rays of the evening sun to penetrate the chapel.

The chapel itself is 34 feet long by 13 feet wide, internal measurement. Including the tower, the total length, external measurement, is 50 feet. There are no remains of any windows in the chapel, the walls having been levelled to within 18 inches of the ground. The traces of the Sanctuary arch however are still perceptible. The sanctuary is a foot narrower than the nave, and is 14 feet in length, thus comprising nearly one half of the chapel. The north wall has been built up again with the old stones to the height of about 14 feet, nearest the tower, and gradually stepped down towards the east. A piece of more recent stone-work connects the portion rebuilt with the east end. The archway has been built up so as to strengthen the tower, the approach to the chantry being now at the west end of the south wall, which has been levelled with the ground. The material of the building is a yellowish sandstone, quarried in the neighbourhood. The plinth stones appear to have been brought from some distance, being red sandstone without the yellowish intermixture which is characteristic of the immediate neighbourhood. These latter stones are 3 feet long, by 18 inches in depth. There is a massive stone occupying the place of the altar. It is 6 feet in length and 2 feet 6 inches in width. The material is red sandstone. Whether this stone formed the original altar-slab, or whether it served for a reardos, and falling forward assumed a horizontal position, it is now impossible to say. On the Gospel side, the impressions in the stone of a human hand and foot in their nude state are distinctly visible. The architecture is Early English. Such is the ruin as it is now to be seen.

A little to the south of the chantry is a cross of Calvary. Hallowed by the centuries which have passed over it, furrowed by storm and rain, by the biting frost and the chilly blast, it stands a true relic of the past. There are the usual three steps from the ground to the base of the cross, covering a space of some 12 feet square. The base is 2 feet 4 inches in height and of a like width. On it is the date 1627. The west side of the socket is completely worn down, so that the cross looks as though it were placed in a stone seat. The shaft is 3 feet 4 inches in height, and is in the form of an obelisk. There are no arms to the cross, but on each of the four sides of the upright is carved in relief a small cross, some 16 inches in height.

I mentioned that the old grave-yard was but two-fifths of an acre in extent. As now seen, however, the cemetery comprises nearly an acre. For in 1835 Sir John Gerard gave an additional plot, to the extent of nearly three-fifths of an acre. The earlier boundary wall was then thrown down, the two portions of land joined together, and the wall which enclosed the old portion extended so as to include the new. Room for 700 additional graves was thus obtained, so that the enclosure now contains 1300 graves. The most conspicuous object in this new portion is a remarkably handsome cross, the gift of Messrs. William, Thomas, and James Tasker, of Greenfield House, Billinge. The material is Billinge stone, from the quarry which Mr. Thomas Tasker worked. The shaft of the cross is 10 feet in height, the base resting on a flight of three steps. The Gerard vault is in this new portion of the cemetery. It is plain and massive. A flight of stone steps conducts to the iron door which closes it. Sir John Gerard, who died February 21st, 1854, was the first whose remains were laid there, his ancestors being buried in the Gerard chantry at Winwick. Here also repose the bodies of Mrs. Clifton, mother of the present Lady Gerard, and of Mrs. Frederick Gerard, of Aspull house, who died March 28th, 1883.

Having thus briefly described the chantry and burial-ground, it is time to devote some attention to their historical aspect.

Windle, or according to the ancient spelling "Wyndhull," is probably so called on account of the eastern portion of the township being hilly, and consequently exposed to the wind. The word "Shaw" is derived from the Saxon "Scutha," a shadow; and hence, by metonomy, a tuft of trees, a wood, which creates a shadow. Thus Windleshaw means a wood on a windy hill.

Before the reign of King John, Windhull gave name to a family, of whom was Edusa, the widow of Alan de Windhull, who gave one mark to the king for a writ of summons for her dower, against another Alan de Windhull (Baines' Lancashire). The latter Alan was son of the former, and, I surmise, step-son to the claimant.

In the reign of Edward the Third, Peter de Burnehulle held the manor of Windhull of William Boteler, and performed for it suit and service to the county and wapentake. The Gerards acquired the manor of Windle, together with that of Bryn, by marriage with the heiress of Peter de Brynhill (Baines' Lancashire).

Wyndell Shae is termed a manor in 4 Edward VI. when it belonged to Sir Thomas Gerarde, in pleadings of that date respecting the title to common of pasture in the waste called Blakehyll Moss, in the lordship of Wyndhull, and the common waste called Withinsha Mosse, in the lordship of Eccleston (Cal. Pl. Duc. Lanc., vol. ii., p. 106). The manor house of Windle is situate on Moss Bank, and is visible from the city of Liverpool. Blakehyll Moss is still recalled to one's mind by Bleak Hill farm.

It is a mistake to call the ruins at Windleshaw, "Windleshaw "Abbey." The popular error evidently arose from a little false reasoning. Seeing that abbeys were in ruins, the profanum vulgus inferred that the converse was also true, that ecclesiastical ruins must have been abbeys. Thus, on this principle, the Domestic

Chapel of St. Catherine at Lydiate is called "Lydiate Abbey." So also the old chantry at Windleshaw has, from time immemorial, been designated "The Abbey."

A chantry is a chapel, sometimes attached to a church, sometimes an aisle or part of an aisle in a church, but more frequently in olden times a separate building, set apart for the offering of the Holy Sacrifice for the especial benefit of the soul of a particular person, generally the founder, and for the souls of the members of his family, and all the faithful.

The chantry at Windleshaw was founded by Sir Thomas Gerard, of Bryn, Knight, who was living in 1435, the 13th year of the reign of King Henry VI. Like his father before him he possessed the confidence and regard of King Henry V., his high military skill and valour, in the wars against France, being subjects of public commendation. It is of him that Père Daniel has recorded (Hist. of France, vol. vi.) that in 1437, at the siege of Montereau, when the king of France attended in person, the garrison behaved with great valour, having at their head an English knight named Thomas Gerard. The king of France here alluded to was Charles VII., who owed his crown to the heroism of the immortal Joan of Arc.

The chapel was probably dedicated to St. Thomas of Canterbury. Mr. Barrett, the Manchester antiquary, so suspects, because a famous well in the neighbourhood takes its name from that saint. Canon Raines (Lanc. Chantries, p. 79,) says, "This chantry, said to be dedicated to St. Thomas." Mr. Baines (Lancashire) rather too authoritatively says, "It was "an old chantry chapel, dedicated to St. Thomas." Of course the proximity of St. Thomas' well to the old chapel is a reason for surmising that St. Thomas was honoured by the latter being dedicated to him, but is certainly insufficient to lead to a conclusion. The best argument in favour of the chantry having been placed under the patronage of St. Thomas is that the donor's name was Thomas. So was his father's, so also his grandfather's, and so his great-grandfather's. It is almost certain, then, that a saint, who gave his name to so many of the family, would be adopted as the patron of the little chapel.

The endowment, as certified in 1548 to Edward VI.'s Commissioners, was £4 16*s.*, going out of the lands of the founder lying in the lordship of Wyndle, and paid at two times equally. The obligation of the priest was "to celebrate for the souls of "the founder's antecessors for ever." Chantry priests in the country were not wealthy men. It would appear otherwise with their brethren who ministered at St. Paul's in London; for Chaucer, in commending his "Persone," says—

> "He did not run unto London unto Saint Poules
> To seeken him a chanterie for soules."

Still our ideas of the value of money must be considerably modified, to enable us to estimate correctly the income of the chantry priest at Windleshaw. At the time of the dissolution there were in all about a thousand chantries in the country, and some ninety in Lancashire. Where religious houses were many, chantries were few; where the former were but sparsely planted, the latter were more plentiful. Thus Lancashire, having but a small number of religious foundations, had more than the ordinary proportion of chantries.

The income of these chantries ranged from 30*s.* to £10, the average being £5 6*s.* 8*d.* In Lancashire the total income was £500 15*s.* 8*d.*, thus giving an average of £5 11*s.* 3*d.* Canon Raines, in accordance with Stillingfleet's principle, triples the amount, on account of the diminished standard of money, and further multiplies the product by eight. Following his course, and multiplying the £4 16*s.* by twenty-four, we find that the priest at Windleshaw received the equivalent to £115 4*s.* of our money.

From the date of the foundation of Windleshaw chantry to 1535 we have no notice respecting it. In that year, the 26th of the reign of Henry VIII. and the first after his rebellion from the Holy See, the Subsidy Commissioner for the Deanery of Warrington assessed the "Cantaria apud Wyndell infra parochiam "praedictam (Pryscotte) ex fundatione Thomae Gerard de Bryn "for tenths 9*s.* 7¼*d.* and for the subsidy 8*s.* 7¾*d.*" (Lanc. MSS., Vol. xxii.) The money thus obtained was handed over to the new supreme head, for the augmentation of the royal estate and the maintenance of the supremacy.

In 1545 Windleshaw was in danger. In November of that year Parliament gave to the king, for the term of his natural life, all chantries, colleges, hospitals, and free chapels, with the lands thereunto belonging. The number of all these religious establishments is said to have been 2374, and they were erected by the ancestors of those whose property was thus invaded by a power against which there was no appeal. As, however, Henry died a little more than a year after this act of spoliation was passed, many of these establishments, and more especially the poorer ones, escaped. In his case, moreover, the object was merely greed. There was no religious animus on his part against such foundations. This is abundantly evident from the monarch's own Will, wherein, amid many prescriptions of a like nature, he orders that there "be "provided an honorable tombe, and a convenient aulter honour- "ably prepared and apparailled with all maner of things requisite "and necessary for dayly masses, there to be said perpetuelly "while the world shall endure." When, then, on January 28th, 1547, the king went to his account, in Windleshaw Chantry

> "The hymn of the priest was still heard the while,
> Sung low in the deep mysterious aisle."

But sadder times were at hand. By an Act passed in 1547, the first of King Edward VI. (1 E. VI., c. 14), there were given to him all the colleges, free chapels, chauntries, hospitals, fraternities or guilds, which were not in the actual and real possession of the late King Henry VIII., to whom the Parliament had made a grant thereof in the 37th year of his reign, nor in the possession of the then king. There are several points to be remarked on with reference to this Act. Cranmer, knowing that the Court harpies would get the lion's share of the spoil, spoke against it at first, though he afterwards deemed it prudent to withdraw his opposition. In the Commons a strong objection was made to that clause, which went to deprive the guilds of their lands, but the leaders of the Opposition, the members for Lynn and Coventry, were silenced by a promise that the Crown would restore to those towns the lands of which the Act might deprive them. It is singular that it is in virtue of the statute passed on this occasion, that lands and goods subsequently given for what are termed superstitious uses, are forfeited to the Crown, although there is nothing in the Act to make it prospective.* Owing to this Act it was that Windleshaw chantry became deserted, and subsequently fell into decay.

In the following year, 1548, the Chantry Commissioners reported as follows :—

"The Chauntrie within the Chapell of Wyndell Richard ffrodsham preist incumbent theꝛ of the ffoundacion of Thomas Gerard Knight to celebrate theꝛ for the soules of his antecessors. The saꝫ is within the Paroshe of Prescott and distant from the Church II [IV] myles and the said preist is remanyng theꝛ and doth celebrate accordinglie."

"Plate, none. The same preist hayth and receyveth yerlie one annuall rent goinge furth of the lordship of Wyndell of iiiiˡᵇ xviˢ payd at two termes equallie. Sum totall of the rental iiiiˡᵇ xviˢ. Reprises, none."

As there was no plate to plunder, and as the foundation was not a reprise, that is a rent charge, it seems probable that the Commissioners could seize on nothing except the building, which being in an out-of-the-way place, and of small dimensions, surrounded moreover by the Gerard property, would probably be restored to them for a small consideration.†

The words, "the said preist is remayning there and doth "celebrate accordinglie," certainly seem to imply that he was not then disturbed. The priest was at that time 54 years of age, and he may have continued in the exercise of his sacred ministry at Windleshaw until his earthly course was consummated.

The Act of 1549, enjoining the use of the Book of Common Prayer, he would have little difficulty in eluding. In July, 1553, King Edward died, and the chantry priest, during the next five years of Mary's reign, would be left unmolested. With the accession of Elizabeth his trials would be renewed. He would be then 65 years of age. In the first Parliament of Queen Elizabeth, it was enacted that the Book of Common Prayer should alone be used by the ministers in all churches, under the penalties of forfeiture, deprivation, and death. It is probable, however, that the chantry priest would not be affected by this enactment, and that he would continue the old service to the end. He would, however, be the last priest to offer up the Holy Sacrifice within the ancient walls; at least to offer it regularly. The priests sent forth from the seminaries abroad, to keep alive the dying embers of the ancient Faith, carried their lives in their hands. As a rule, they moved about from place to place, receiving hospitality in the houses of the nobility and gentry. It is not improbable that the inmates of Windle Hall often thus harboured priests, and it may be that on such occasions the little chantry hard by served for its ancient purpose. And this leads me to the legend of St. Thomas's Well.

* See, however, in this connection the statute 23 H. VIII., c. 10.

† On the one hand we have it stated by the Commissioners that "upon the examynacion "of this foundation of Sir Thomas Gerarde, Knight, to celebrate for the souls of his "auncestors for ever, it could not appear that any lands were assessed for the intent above "said" (Ex libro B. Duch. Lan.). On the other, however, under date of 9 Elizabeth, there is mention of a decree of the Court of the Duchy of Lancaster, in proceedings "Inter "Reginam and Gerard," concerning "the discharge of Lands in Wyndle supposed to be "Chantrey Lands, from paying rent to the Queen" (Lanc. and Chesh. Records, p. 253). It would appear, therefore, that this matter was subsequently further inquired into, with the result that the conclusion at which the Commissioners of Edward VI. arrived was ratified.

The Well is some 300 yards from the chantry ruins. It is far larger than any ordinary well, being some 9 yards long by six yards wide. At present the water is but 2 feet deep, and there is a fall of some 7 feet before the surface of the water is reached. The sides are built up with stone, and the place would appear to have been suited for bathing purposes. Barrett speaks of it "being bathed in oft in summer in regard of "extraordinary virtues being credited to the water." This may have been true at the time that he wrote, but since the sides were built up it would be impossible, At the head of the well there is the inscription: "ST. THOMAS'S WELL W. H E. 1798." The initials represent William and Elizabeth Hill, the then proprietors of the adjacent land, the date referring to the building up of the sides of the well. Since the above date the water was obtained by letting down cans into it. It was said to be very efficacious for the curing of sore eyes. Formerly a footpath passed through the old graveyard and led to the well, and thence onward to Windle Smithy. When, however, the present cemetery at

Windle was formed, the footpath was closed, and the public debarred from access to the well. Thus the recollection of the virtues formerly ascribed to its waters is passing away. The tradition with regard to the well—a tradition which comes from ancient sources, but does not appear to have been widely circulated—is, that a priest saying mass at Windleshaw was discovered by the pursuivants; that he fled, was pursued, overtaken at the spot where the well is, cut down and his head struck off, and that where his head fell, the spring gushed forth. There are of course numberless legends touching the origin of wells, and this one has a remarkable resemblance to many better authenticated stories. It is not the supposed origin of the well, but the tradition that a priest was put to death in the neighbourhood, that I would call attention to. Now this tradition is confirmed by another, which in its circumstances must be erroneous, but which may very probably have some foundation in fact. This second tradition is to the effect that, a priest fleeing from his persecutors, was captured whilst endeavouring to leap over the wall which bounds the graveyard, and that the mark of his hand was left on the coping stone. As regards this last wonderful circumstance there can be no truth, for the wall was not built until 1778, the very year in which the first relaxation from the penal laws was granted. Still, setting aside the marvellous in each of these cases, we have the tradition that a priest was captured and slain in the neighbourhood of the old chantry. This tradition, especially as in the one case the priest is said to have been discovered whilst saying mass in the old chapel, would lead one to infer that the chapel was possibly made use of occasionally during the time of persecution. I have already mentioned the fact that the impression of a hand and foot is distinctly to be seen on the large stone occupying the place of the altar. Whether such impression suggested the origin of the tradition, or whether some one, hearing of the tradition, exercised his ingenuity by carving the above resemblances, it is impossible now to say.

As to its final destruction, Barrett, writing in 1780, says—"the "place said to be demolished during the wars of Charles I." This seems to be the general tradition, but there is no documentary evidence to confirm it. There is a fond story amongst the people that Oliver Cromwell planted his guns on Billinge Hill, and from that position battered down the chapel. Had his artillery been furnished by Messrs. Armstrong, Whitworth, or Krupp, the task would have been feasible. But as the balls would have a little more than three miles to travel, without making any allowance for parabolic curves, we may safely dismiss this feature of the story. Still the tradition in its substance helps to point out the time when the old chantry fell beneath the destroyer's hand. We know certainly that if either Cromwell or any of his troops had known of the existence of such a place, and had been near to it, its fate would have been sealed. Now, in 1644, Lathom House, distant some nine miles from Windleshaw, was besieged during eighty-eight days, by three thousand troops under Fairfax. In the following year it was again invested, and eventually captured by General Egerton, who had four thousand men under his command. It is pretty certain that bands of marauders would divert the monotony of the siege by making excursions in the neighbourhood, and pillaging the property of so-called malignants. It is far from unlikely that some such band tore off the roof and broke down the walls of this ancient sanctuary. As far then as may be conjectured, the date of the destruction may be said to be 1644 or thereabouts.

The first written notice regarding the chantry since the visit of Edward VI.'s commissioners is that of the antiquary Barrett, above alluded to. He visited Windleshaw in 1780, made a drawing of the ruins, and gave a description thereof, which description, allowing for lesser inaccuracies, is applicable at the present day. Mr. Baines has copied Barrett's description. The ivy, however, which the antiquary so graphically pictured, no longer clothes the tower. Three elderberry trees within the chantry walls are now the sole living things.

Mr. Foley (Records of the English Province, series xii., p. 407,) publishes a letter on the subject from Rev. Henry Beeston, of Portico, to Dr. Oliver, dated Sept. 3, 1834. The letter contains no information, but mentions a tradition "that Windleshaw Priory," as he calls it, "was dependent on the Abbey at Upholland, not "far distant to the north-west." This mistake arose from calling Windleshaw an Abbey. There was no connection at all between the places, and they are seven miles asunder. Mr. Foley adds some comments of his own, which are more erroneous than the text which he is endeavouring to elucidate. He ends by saying that the public cemetery for St. Helens being opened, the ancient burial-ground, being quite full, was finally closed. There is not a word of truth in this statement. The old burial-ground was never closed. No fewer than sixty-six people were laid therein during the last year. But when was it opened? Here again there is nothing definitely known. The old cross is of the pre-Reformation period. It is similar in form to a number of crosses which stood in the neighbourhood. Such were Marshall's Cross, Peasley Cross, a cross at Cronton, another at Eccleston Hill, and a third at Rainhill, the last alone now standing, though removed to a less exposed position. Now the crosses here mentioned occupied conspicuous situations, and could not therefore have been erected during any post-Reformation period. The form of the Windleshaw Cross resembling the above, the inference that they were all made about the same time is clear. But, on the other hand, it does not seem probable that the ground was made use of for interments before the Reformation. Prescot was the Parish Church, and the Vicar would probably assert his rights. Then there is the date on the base of the cross, 1627. Now in 1611, as we learn from a letter of William Blundell, the cavalier, "a bitter storm of persecution extended its fury in these parts to "ye bodies of deceased Catholics. The Churches in all places "denyed them buriall; some were layd in ye fields, some in gar-"dens, and others in high-wayes as it chanced. One of thes "being interred in a common land had her Corps pulled out by "ye hoggs and used accordingly" (Trans. Hist. Soc., vol. xxxi., p. 51). He then goes on to say that his grandfather enclosed a piece of ground for the burial of Catholics, to prevent the like for the future. It is most probable, then, that the same reason, the refusal to bury Catholics in the old parish yards, led to the opening of the grave-yard at Windleshaw. The "Harkirke," the little cemetery formed by Mr. Blundell, was opened in 1611, that is, only sixteen years before the date on the Windleshaw Cross.

My conclusion, then, is that the latter date, 1627, marks the time when the cemetery began to be generally used. A few interments probably took place before that date, but the date must have been inscribed for some purpose. It cannot mark the time when the cross was made, as we have already seen. It must then denote the opening of the grave-yard. Whether the cross always stood in its present position, or whether it was removed thither when the cemetery was formed, cannot be determined. If the latter were the case, there would be more reason for affixing the date ; but whether originally erected there or brought from elsewhere, the date 1627 seems to denote the opening of the cemetery.

But little light can be thrown on this question by referring to the gravestones. It is well known that many of the stones have, like those who slept beneath them, crumbled into dust. The oldest inscription is within the chantry walls. It is written on one of the blocks of red-sandstone which formed the plinth of the Chapel, and which now rests where the altar once stood, and is as follows :—"Here lieth the body of Thomas Parkenson, P.C., "who departed this life March 7th, 1751. Etatis 38. Requies- "cat in pace." P.C. stands for "Presbyter Catholicus" (Catholic Priest). A reference to the Douay Diary shows a Thomas Parkenson born July 27, 1713 : evidently the same person. Bishop Dicconson's List of Priests, compiled in 1741, represents him as serving Black Brook and St. Helens.

The oldest stone in the open yard records the name of John Fletcher of Denton's Green, who departed January 3, 1757.

I must, however, add that there is a single inscription which appears to be much older than either of the above. It is as follows :—"Here lieth the body of James the son of James and "Alice Banks, who departed this life Oct. 3, 1700. Aged one "year." If the date be really 1700, there is no disputing the fact that this is the oldest stone in the graveyard. The first cipher is not, however, very plain, and it may be a nine. If the figure be a cipher there is a gap of 57 years between the first and the second mortuary inscription, which would seem very improbable.

As to the tract of country for the inhabitants of which Windleshaw was the burying-place, it may be said to comprise all between Warrington and Ormskirk, and between Wigan and Liverpool. Until the grave-yard and the vaults at St. Nicholas's, Copperas Hill, were opened, there were many interments from Liverpool.

As a place of sepulture for the Clergy, Windleshaw holds a unique position. I doubt if there be any cemetery in the country where, since the Reformation, so many priests have been buried. One can still read the inscriptions on the tombs of one bishop and nineteen priests; but many more are known to have been buried there. The number probably exceeds sixty. As to the laity, though most of these were natives of Lancashire, yet in the old ground repose the remains of Edward John, son of William Thomas Salvin, Esq., of Croxdale, in the county of Durham, as a representative of the north; and of Elizabeth Varco, of Truro, in the county of Cornwall, for the south.

Unfortunately, the Catholics were not always in undisputed possession of their cemetery. About the year 1760, the Quakers became possessed of the adjoining land, and as there was no wall to divide the burial-ground from their possession, they pretended to have a claim over the cemetery itself. They made themselves very disagreeable, maintained that there was no right of road for funerals, insisted on levying heavy charges, and were the cause of constant heart-burnings and endless disputes. About 1778, they sold their property to Mr. William Hill, the gentleman above alluded to in connection with St. Thomas' Well. The wall round the little plot was then built by the Catholics. Mr. Hill was of the Presbyterian persuasion: he was charitable and kind-hearted, and all troubles ceased when he became possessed of the adjoining land. He took a great interest in the old ruin and grave-yard, and used to spend hours on the spot. On one occasion, when dining with Thomas Basil Eccleston, Esq., of Eccleston Hall, Charles Orrell, Esq., of Blackbrook, and Thomas West, Esq., of Croppers Hill, he resigned all right and title which might be his to the grave-yard, bestowing it on the Catholics for ever. He further conceded a right of road to the grave-yard. This road is now included in the ground purchased by the St. Helens Cemetery. Mr. Hill at the same time expressed a strong desire to be buried at Windleshaw, and described the spot he had selected for his grave. Seeing, however, that the ideas of his friends did not coincide with his own on this latter point, he exclaimed—"Well, "I will be buried in my own field, close to the wall, and will creep "under to you". The Rev. Henry Beeston, in the letter above noticed, says that "Mr. Hill left directions in his will that his "body should be interred in accordance with this expression of "his wish". Whether his will contained such a clause or not I am unable to say. His executors, if it did, did not pay any attention to it, for the old gentleman was buried at Prescot, and thus had no opportunity of testing his capabilities for post-mortem excavations.

About the year 1824, Mr. Hill's son sold his estate to Sir William Gerard for the sum of £11,000. As before mentioned, in 1835 Sir John Gerard, successor to Sir William, gave an additional plot of ground, which was then incorporated with the old grave-yard. The ground was given to the Catholics worshipping at the Churches of Birchley, Ashton, Lowe House, Blackbrook, and Portico. The above congregations then erected the sexton's lodge, hearse-house, and gateway, and enclosed the newly-obtained ground with a wall.

In 1861, the adjoining land was purchased from Lord Gerard by the Burial Board of St. Helens, and the Windle Cemetery laid out. Iron gates, erected by the administrators of the Windleshaw grave-yard, allow of communication between the latter and the new cemetery.

A few remarks with reference to those interred at Windleshaw, who occupied a more prominent position whilst running their earthly course, may now be added.

Firstly, as to the Bishop. The inscription is brief: "Also of "the Rt Rev[d] Dr. Thomas Penswick, Bishop of Europum, who "died January 28th, 1836, aged 63 years." It is worthy of remark that the Bishop's memorial notice is just half the length of that of his niece, Elizabeth Mary Talbot, a girl of nine years of age. The Bishop was born at the Manor House, Ashton; his father, Mr. Thomas Penswick, being the agent of Sir Thomas Gerard. When the College at Douai was invaded by the Republicans, in 1793, Thomas Penswick was one of those chosen by the President to secrete the plate from their rapacity. It was a task which demanded skill and courage. Entering on the Mission, he was, after some time, appointed to St. Nicholas's, Copperas Hill, of which church he was the first Incumbent. A tablet to his memory may there be seen. Selected by Dr. Smith, Bishop of the Northern District, as his coadjutor, Dr. Penswick was consecrated June 29th, 1824. On the death of the above-named Bishop, he succeeded him July 30th, 1831. Suffering from dropsy and heart disease, he betook himself to the house of his brother, Randolph Penswick, situate in Lower Lane, Ashton, where he ended his days.

The Bishop's brother, the Rev. John Penswick, was, from the year 1804 to 1849, the pastor at Birchley. He then took up his abode near Ashton Cross, becoming private chaplain to Sir John Gerard; and on the death of the latter, to his successor, Sir Robert, now Lord, Gerard. He died on the 30th of October, 1864, aged 86 years, during 66 of which he had been a priest. He was the last of the Douai priests, a College which, founded on Michaelmas Day in 1568, continued to send forth priests to England until October 12th, 1793, when it was seized by the soldiers of the French Republic. In the beginning of the same year Daniel O'Connell had bid adieu to his alma mater (Douai), the ship in which he sailed taking the news to England of the execution of Louis XVI. Mr. Penswick, at the request of Canon John Walker, then of Blackbrook, wrote an account of the downfall of the great College, of which he was the last, though not least worthy, son. Mr. Penswick's last resting place adjoins the vault of his friend and kind patron, Lord Gerard. The inscription on his tomb is as follows:—"Pray for the soul of the Rev. John "Penswick, who died at Garswood, October 30th, 1864. Aged "86 years, in the 62nd year of his priesthood. R.I.P." There is a marble tablet at the base of the Cemetery Cross of Birchley to the memory of this venerable man, on which is recorded the fact that he was the last of the Douai priests.

"Rev. Marmaduke Stone, S.J., died August 21st, 1834, aged "85." These lines call to mind one who was in his day great amongst his brethren—"clarum et venerabile nomen". Born at Draycot, co. Staff., November 28th, 1748, he, in co-operation with Father Strickland, worked successfully for the restoration of the English Province of the Jesuits. May 19th, 1803, he was named the first Provincial since the dissolution of the Society, in 1773, by virtue of the famous Constitution of Clement XIV., "Dominus ac Redemptor Noster". In 1829 he removed to Lowe House, where he became perfectly blind, and died as above stated. At Stonyhurst College a marble tablet records his distinguished services. Mr. Sheil, M.P., who was at Stonyhurst when Father Stone was Superior, speaks, in his Recollections of the Jesuits, in eulogistic terms of his many virtues.

"To the memory of Philip Butler, C.A.D., who lived 26 years "at Blackbrook, and died there the 9th day of December, 1777, "aged 52 years." The initials C.A.D. stand for Collegii Anglorum Duaci—"of the College of the English at Douai". From the College Diary we learn that he was born December 8th, 1724, his parents being William and Dorothy Butler, neé Ashton. He was a member of the distinguished but now extinct family of the Butlers of Rawcliffe. Being a person of means, he was the chief contributor to the erection of the first chapel at Blackbrook, "with two chambers over it, and a cellar under it," and likewise secured the site from Mr. Orrell for 500 years, paying the yearly rent of one shilling on the 29th September. He was the Vicar-General of Bishop Francis Petre.

On a handsome elevated stone, to the east of the chantry ruins, one reads: "Here lie the remains of Jean Bapt. Fran. "Graux de la Bruyere. He was the first who brought to perfection "a work of very considerable magnitude and importance to the "commercial interest of the British nation, the Cast Plate Glass "manufactory (sic.) In memory of the distinguished abilities "of so deserving a man these lines are inscribed." He was born at St. Gaubain, in Picardie, in France. He died at Ravenhead, December 5th, 1787, in the 48th year of his age. How much does not the town of St. Helens, with its 60,000 inhabitants, owe to this man; and how few there are who know it. The British Plate Glass Company was established in 1773, and erected their manufactory at Ravenhead, near St. Helens. It occupied thirty acres of land, and was enclosed by a wall, round which were placed the houses of the workmen, so that it was a sort of distinct colony. The buildings cost £40,000, and gave employment to 300 workmen. The manufacture was introduced by workmen from France, Monsieur de la Bruyere being at their head. Within the chantry lies a relative of the above, Mr. Angelique Graux, of Picardie, in France, who died "apud Raven-"head, April 10th, 1786, ætatis 26. R.I.P."

"Here lieth the body of Mrs. Elizabeth Low, of Cowley Hill, "Widow, who departed this life the 18th of November, 1766, "ætatis suae 96." The husband of this lady was Anthony Low, M.D., of an ancient family in Derbyshire. His name appears in the list of those who complied with an Act of Parliament (1 Geo. I.) entitled "An Act to oblige Papists to register their "names and real Estates".

Winifred, daughter of Anthony and Elizabeth Low, married John Gorsuch Eccleston, Esq., of Eccleston Hall; and on his demise retired to Cowley Hill, where she lived with her mother. She was fifty-one years a widow, and dying June 15th, 1793, ætatis 81, was buried within Lowe House Church, St. Helens. To the mission of Lowe House she was the principal benefactress, in fact the mission owes its existence to her generosity. Hence its name. She herself, being the widow of Mr. Eccleston, was always known as Dame Eccleston, but she wished the name of her own family to designate the place which her charity founded.

Within the chantry walls there is the following epitaph :— "Here lies interred the body of the Revd. Francis Crathorne, "of Garswood. He was born at Scarborough, the 21st of "October, 1762, and was unfortunately drowned off Southport, "the 23rd of May, 1822." He was most probably a member of the distinguished family of Crathorne of East Ness, in Yorkshire. He was the priest at Garswood, or Hollin Hey. In addition to exercising his priestly functions, he practised medicine with signal success. The writer possesses a letter directed to Mr. Crathorne from Fishwick, beyond the Ribble, and asking for his advice respecting corporal ailments. On the fatal day named above, viz., Thursday, May 23rd, he, Mr. John Gerard, of Windle Hall, father of the present Lord Gerard; Mr. Adamson, a manufacturer, of Ashton; his son Roger; and a boatman named Ball, went out for a sail in Mr. Gerard's yacht. The latter gentleman was of a very venturesome disposition, and gloried in carrying as much canvas as possible. The result was that the boat capsized. Mr. Crathorne was an excellent swimmer, and though 60 years of age, and encumbered with a thick overcoat and heavy top-boots, he could have saved his own life. But he knew his duty better. Not for an instant did his presence of mind forsake him. The excited throng on the beach could plainly descry how with one hand he bore up the sinking form of Mr. Gerard, whilst with the other he made the sign of the Cross over his drowning comrades; pronouncing, doubtless, at the same time, the words of absolution, and exhorting them to fervent acts of repentance. At last the weight of water bore down the dauntless priest, and when, on the Sunday morning, his body was discovered near the spot where he sank, his hands were grasping the ill-fated boots, from which he had striven in vain to free himself. The remains of Mr. Gerard were washed up on the shore at Cockerham, on Saturday, June 1st. Intense was the excitement caused by this sad accident, and probably it was the gravest catastrophe which Southport had witnessed up to the late loss of the lifeboat.

The handsomest monument within the walls of the chantry is that of the Thicknesse family. This family, late of Beech Hill, near Wigan, but formerly of Barterley Hall, in the County of Stafford, was one of great antiquity. It descended from Robert Thicknesse, who was Lord of Barterley in 1274, the second year of the reign of Edward I. The estate descended from father to son for five hundred years, in unbroken succession. Later on, by marriage with Elizabeth Stockton, daughter of Thomas Stockton, of London, and of The Oaks, Cheshire, the latter property fell to the Thicknesses. Ralph Thicknesse, born in 1693, married Alethea, daughter of Richard Bostock, M.D., of Whiscall. This Alethea was a Catholic, her father, Richard Bostock, being one who registered his name and estates, in accordance with the Act above-mentioned. He died in 1747, and there is a monumental inscription to his memory in Bath Abbey Church. The Alethea above-named is buried at Windleshaw. She is described as widow of Ralph Thicknesse, Esq., of Barterley Hall, in the County of Stafford. It is probable that her husband did not become a Catholic, and that he died and was buried at Barterley. The date of Alethea's death is not inscribed on the tomb at Windleshaw. But the Thicknesses have also a burying place in the Parish Churchyard at Wigan. A handsome cross—now, alas! perishing—rises over their vault; and on the cross are recorded the deaths, not of those only who sleep below, but of those also who rest at Windleshaw. It is worthy of remark that whereas in the Catholic cemetery English is the language written on the monuments, in the Protestant burial ground Latin is adopted. From the Wigan inscription we learn that "Alethea conjux Radulphi Thicknesse de Barterley "Armigeri, ex prosapia Bostock de Bostock, obiit die II. Mensis "Martii Anno Domini MDCCLXXII. apud Wigan. Sepulta apud "Windleshaw".

The next inscription is as follows:—"Also the body of Ralph "Thicknesse, M.D. He departed this life in the 72nd year of "his age, on the 10th Day of February, A.D. 1790." The Wigan inscription adds the day of his birth—October 28th, 1718. This

Ralph, the only Catholic male of the family, sold the Staffordshire and Cheshire estates in 1747, and bought Beech Hill, near Wigan. He was a distinguished physician, and author of many medical works of repute.

The next inscription is: "And his wife, whose remains are "also deposited here, died November 8th, A.D. 1804, aged 76." Her name, as we learn from the Wigan record, was Anne Dorothy, also of the Bostock family—"ex prosapia Bostock de "Bostock".

The tombstone at Windleshaw also records the name of Winifred Monypenny, daughter of Ralph and Dorothy Thicknesse, and widow of John Monypenny, Esq. She died on the 20th of July, 1836, aged 72 years.

The mortal remains likewise are interred here of Roda Thicknesse, who died on the 8th of May, 1837, aged 79. This beautiful name, Roda, recalls to one's mind the damsel who came to hearken when Peter, delivered by the angel out of prison, knocked at the door of the house of Mary the mother of John, who was surnamed Mark.

The girls, then, continued in the Catholic Faith. It was otherwise with the son. I said that Alethea Bostock had brought the Catholic Religion into the Thicknesse family; but as James the Fifth of Scotland said of his crown, when he heard that a daughter was born to his house, "It cam wi' a lass, and it 'll "gang wi' a lass," so was it with the Thicknesse religion. For Ralph Thicknesse, Esq., son of the above Ralph and Anne Dorothy, married Sarah, daughter of John and Mary Anne Woodcock, of Newborough House, and conformed to the established church. Wealth and honours were his. In 1792, in conjunction with his brother-in-law, Thomas Woodcock, Esq., he founded the Wigan Bank. The Bank was firstly in the names of Thicknesse and Woodcock, subsequently of Woodcock, Son, and Eckersley, and latterly was merged in the well-known Parr's Banking Company. Mr. Thicknesse had likewise the honour of representing the borough of Wigan in Parliament. He died October 6th, 1842, and was interred in the grave-yard of the Parish Church at Wigan. His son, Ralph Anthony Thicknesse, Esq., of Beech Hill, married his cousin Mary Anne, daughter of Thomas Woodcock, Esq., of Newborough. He also was member of Parliament for Wigan, and was likewise Deputy-Lieutenant for Lancashire. His son Ralph was born April 15, 1833. The tourist, as he passes from Bowness to Ambleside, cannot fail to notice a plain cross standing on the water's edge. If he draw near he will read—

Ralph Thicknesse, 13th Sept., 1853. Aged 20 years.
Thomas Woodcock, 13th Sept., 1853. Aged 19 years.
Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour.

Opposite the cross, the waters of Windermere closed over the struggling forms of the youthful cousins. Thus ended the race of Thicknesse. The final story is told pathetically on a marble tablet erected in Wigan Parish Church :—"Sacred to the memory "of Ralph Anthony Thicknesse, some years a Member for this "Town, who died at Harrogate, August 22, 1854. Aged 54. He "was suddenly cut off, the last of his name and race, having fol- "lowed his only son to an untimely grave but a few months "before."

"Here lieth the body of the Rev. Mr. Thomas Weldon, of "Scholes. Obiit 26th of April, 1786. Aetatis 75." Of him we read (Records of the English Province, vol. v.) that in 1736, being 25 years old, he was invited by Colonel Pippard, his maternal uncle, commanding Walshe's Regiment in the Irish Brigade, to accept a commission under him. He was an officer at the siege of Philipsburgh, when, June 12, 1734, he saw the head of his commander, Marshal the Duke of Berwick,* carried off by a cannon ball. After the above incident, Mr. Weldon chose the ecclesiastical state. His military proclivities do not seem, however, to have been utterly uprooted, for to the end of his life, the sword which he wore at the siege of Philipsburgh hung over his head whilst he slept. This priest was also perhaps the last, in these parts, who was subjected to annoyance on account of his profession. Down to 1778, the law of William III., awarding hundred pounds to any successful informer who discovered priest, was in full force. Some base fellow, in hopes of obtaining the reward, had Father Weldon arrested and taken before Mr. Hughes, J.P., of Sheardley Hall, on the charge of exercising faculties as a priest. The informer was, however, disappointed Mr. Hughes, being a Christian gentleman, declined to hear the case, saying that Mr. Weldon was a quiet, amiable neighbour.

* The Duke of Berwick was a natural son of the Duke of York, afterwards James II., his mother being Arabella Churchill, sister of the famous Duke of Marlborough. He had the military genius of his uncle. He was, moreover, a man of honour and a true Christian. "Never," says his biographer, "did man practise religion so much, and speak of it so little".

I cannot do better than conclude with the following verses which, to my mind, are far superior to the ordinary poetic effusions which one reads on tombstones.

There is a handsome Gothic tablet placed against the South wall of the chapel. The inscription is as follows:—"I.H.S. Sacred "to the memory of John Barnes, Esq., Attorney-at-Law, who died "on the 30th December, 1811. Aged 32 years. He was a dis- "tinguished member of his profession and a man of strict honour, "a sincere Christian, and a kind friend to his numerous acquaint- "ances and to the poor. R.I.P." Then follow these lines, which I copied down some years ago, before the rude elements had rendered them illegible :—

"Stranger, tread lightly here this hallowed earth,
Here lie the ashes of departed worth.
True to his God, a friend sincere he proved,
And died lamented, as he lived beloved.
His virtues with his eager spirit flew
To realms of light, where joys are ever new.
There, resting from its toils and mortal strife,
From heaven-born springs it drinks eternal life.
Generous pilgrim, whilst you're lingering here,
Shed o'er this grave one tributary tear,
And learn of him, o'er whose remains you sigh,
To live for heaven, that you like him may die."

THE DOMESDAY RECORD OF THE LAND BETWEEN RIBBLE AND MERSEY.

By Andrew E. P. Gray, M.A., F.S.A., RECTOR OF WALLASEY.

(Read 1st December, 1887.)

A REALLY critical edition of the Liber de Wintoniâ (as Domesday Book is technically called)—one which would bring the full resources of modern scholarship to bear upon all the points suggested by it,—is still a desideratum, and, as Professor Freeman says, it is an object which ought to be taken up as a national work. A considerable amount of Domesday literature has appeared since the royal order in 1767 for the publication of this amongst other records; but much remains to be done, for a great deal of that which has been given to the world on the subject is deficient in breadth of treatment and in accuracy of criticism. We in this part of the country are greatly indebted to Mr. Beamont for his Introduction and Notes to the photozincographic facsimile of the Domesday Record of the two north-western counties palatine. Mr. Beamont has been a member of this society almost ever since its foundation 40 years ago, and is one of whom the society is justly proud. It seems, indeed, rash for me to venture upon the subject which I have chosen, lest I should be supposed to be putting myself in competition with him, or setting myself up as a critic upon his Introduction; but

I thought that perhaps we might be led over some new groun to-night, if we turned to the Domesday account of the land Inte Ripam et Mersham, and considered, firstly, the history of tha territory, and then its hundreds, the townships mentioned, th landlords, and the churches. Into general points affecting th whole country (as, for example, the differences between radme and drenghes, or the dimensions of the carucate and hide c land), we need not enter this evening; but perhaps we may fin time, at the end of the paper, for a momentary glance into the bye-laws (so to call them) and customs which were then in force in this particular neighbourhood.

I. As to the history of the territory. Whilst our heathen English forefathers were gradually first devastating, and then themselves settling down in, the eastern and southern parts of the country, to which they gave their name, the British principalities in the north-west drew together into the kingdom of Strathclyde—a kingdom which stretched from the Clyde to the Mersey, and from the sea to the hills that form the watershed. The capital of this kingdom was Alclwyd, or Dumbarton, which was strongly fortified to protect the British from the incursions of the Scots and Picts of the north; the hills guarded them on the east from the Northumbrian English and the Britons of Elmet (which, roughly speaking, answered to the West Riding); south of the Mersey was another British kingdom, Gwynedd, of which the capital was Chester. It was not until the seventh century that the southern portion of the kingdom of Strathclyde, tha part which now forms the county of Lancaster, became English territory; it was gradually dismembered by the Northumbria English. In the year 613, Æthelfrith, the King of Northumber land, whose grandfather Ida had founded the Bernician kingdom advanced over the moors at the head of Ribblesdale into ou south Lancashire, and, crossing the Mersey, marched on t Chester, where his rival, Eadwine, had taken refuge. Th battle of Chester need not detain us; it has been fully described by Mr. Green in his Making of England. It was a decisive victory, and marked an important step in the English conquest of Britain, for it thrust a wedge of English territory between the Britons of what we now call Wales and their kinsmen of Strathclyde; and amongst other results of the battle was the transference of the land between Ribble and Mersey from the kingdom of Strathclyde to that of Northumberland. Elmet, thus cut off from other British principalities, yielded to Eadwine thirteen years later; and Leeds (which was then called Loidis or Lothene, and which it is consequently difficult to distinguish sometimes from the Lothian which stretched from the Forth to the Tweed)—Leeds had become Northumbrian before 655; and about twelve years later, lands on the Ribble and in Amounderness were granted to St. Wilfrith, so that part (at any rate) of Lancashire north of the Ribble must have become English by that time. It would be interesting to enquire into the further dismemberment of Strathclyde, and speak of the long-continued independence or semi-independence of Galloway and Cumberland; but to do so would lead us too far from the subject in hand.

Lancashire south of the Ribble became Northumbrian, then, in 613, and seems to have continued to belong to Northumberland until the arrangement made in 877 between the Danish host and Ceolwulf, the under-king of that part of the Marchland, which the English still retained: in the previous year Yorkshire had been parted amongst Danish landholders, and then, in 877, the eastern half of the Marchland was in the same way parcelled out amongst the Danes; but a long strip of territory, embracing the valleys of the Mersey and the Severn, was handed over to Ceolwulf ("an unwise Thegn," as the Chronicle calls him), and the name of Marchland was afterwards confined to this territory, stretching from the Ribble to the Bristol Avon, and shut in east and west by the Danes and the British. This was the first connection between South Lancashire and the Mercian kingdom—a connection, that we may regard as having become an incorporation, when the great King Eadward, who was almost the peer of his father Ælfred, set about, in 923, the building of a fort at Thelwall (a township near Warrington, partly in Lancashire and partly in Cheshire, for the Mersey runs through the township and despatched thence a Mercian force to garrison the old Roman town of Manchester, which had probably lain desolate since the days of Æthelfrith. These fortresses of Mancheste and Thelwall, together with two built a few years before by Kin Eadward's sister at Chester and Runcorn, were intended n doubt to render any effective alliance between the Danes an the Britons impossible.

South Lancashire from that time was part and parcel of th Mercian Ealdermanry, or earldom, as it was afterwards called; and although not absolutely incorporated with Cheshire, it was regarde as an appendage to that county, which at the time of Domesday Book embraced also a considerable portion of Flintshire and Den bighshire, the Hundreds of Atiscross and Exestan being after wards handed over to Wales: it will be an interesting question fo those who advocate Home Rule or Disestablishment for Wales to decide what the boundary of Wales is; will they go by Domesday Book, or will they prefer Henry VIII.'s ipse dixit in 1536 as to what is Wales, and what is England? It is of course commonly said that South Lancashire appears in Domesday Book under the head of Cheshire, but this is not strictly true; the account of it is given on two pages, after the account of Cheshire, and just as each page of the portion about Cheshire is headed by the word Cestrescire in red ink, so these two pages relating to South Lancashire have their own separate heading, also in red ink, Inter Ripam et Mersham. This anomalous district was granted to Roger of Poitou, of whom we shall speak later on; and, after his second forfeiture, the greater portion of it was given by Henry I. to Ranulf, the third palatine Earl of Chester, though it never became part of the palatinate. On the extinction of the male line of these Earls of Chester in 1232, the land between Ribble and Mersey was inherited by the great house of Ferrers; and either in that year, or in 1266, at the downfall of that restless family (which had shared in every intrigue and conspiracy since the reign of Stephen), it must have been incorporated with the newly-formed county of Lancaster. That county ad previously consisted of the Honor of Lancaster and the Hundred of Amounderness, and it was shortly to be augmented by the Liberty of Furness, taken from Westmoreland in 1295, and again seemingly in 1312 by that portion of South Lancashire which had not been granted to the Earls of Chester, viz., the Honor of Clitheroe, which Thomas Earl of Lancaster inherited in right of his wife.

Such is a sketch of the vicissitudes which the land between Ribble and Mersey went through before it finally became part of the county of Lancaster.

II. And now we will turn to its Hundreds. This of course is not the place to enquire into the history of the division of the country into hundreds; the Bishop of Chester in the first volume of his Constitutional History has said (I suppose) all that can be said on the subject. But one can not forbear quoting the delightfully naïve remark of Baines, which is (I am sorry to see) repeated in the edition now being issued in monthly parts: "There are evidently no sufficient data to determine into how "many hundreds South Lancashire was divided in the Roman "period, and still less in the time of the aborigines," which is very much the same sort of thing as if one were to wonder into how many bishoprics Asia Minor was divided at the time of the Trojan War. Between the Ribble and Mersey there are now four Hundreds—West Derby, Leyland, Blackburn, and Salford; the last three of these are the same now as they were in the days of Edward the Confessor; but, where we have now the one Hundred of West Derby, Domesday gives us three—Derby, Newton, and Warrington: when were these three condensed into one? It would appear that various changes in local boundaries were made either slightly before, or very early in, the reign of Henry III.: the Lancaster, that appears in the Pipe Rolls from 1165 onwards, is not the County but the Honor, and we can not be sure of the existence of the county of Lancaster before 1221. A year or two after that date the Hundreds of Newton and Warrington had certainly been condensed into the Hundred of West Derby ; it may be that whatever year saw th amalgamation of Amounderness and the Lancaster Honor in the county of Lancaster (the germ of the present county), sa also the amalgamation of these three Hundreds into one.

It would be interesting if some one with local knowledge coul point out why it is that the boundary between Newton an Derby Hundreds runs through the middle of the parish Wigan ; the townships of Holland, Dalton, Winstanley, an Orrell being in the latter Hundred. The boundary of the Hun dred of Newton is here very nearly, but not exactly, the same a that of the later Fee of Makerfield, which included the greate part of Wigan parish. At the present time there is one townshi in that parish—Aspull by name—which is in Salford Hundred all the other townships being in West Derby. This fact had escaped the notice of the lawyers who drafted the Act by which the Liverpool Bishopric was founded ; and the Bill had made some progress, before I caused it to be pointed out to Lord Beauchamp (who had charge of it in the Upper House) that the Bill, if its wording remained unaltered, would leave the one township of Aspull in the middle of Lancashire, as an island (so to call it), under the jurisdiction of the Bishop of Chester.

We may notice in passing that there have been many changes in the Hundreds of Cheshire also. Wirrall appears in Domesday as Wilaveston, Macclesfield as Hamestan, and other names are changed, and not only that, but the present Hundreds of Buckland and Edisbury each contain two of the Hundreds of Domesday Book.

III. As to the Townships mentioned in South Lancashire. It is well known that Domesday is here much more meagre than in most parts of England. Newton and Warrington are the only places spoken of by name in their respective Hundreds. In Blackburn Hundred we have the names of Blackburn, Whalley, Huncoat near Accrington, Walton-le-Dale, and Pendleton near Clitheroe ; in Salford Hundred those of Salford, Ratcliff, Manchester, and Rochdale ; whilst Leyland and Penwortham are the

ly names given in Leyland Hundred. On the other hand, in erby Hundred we have the names of more than 40 townships hamlets; but this is all out of the 188 manors which Domes- y itself says existed between Ribble and Mersey.

Every one knows that amongst these manors Liverpool is not entioned, or at least only appears under the name of Esmedune Smithdown, a place mentioned in documents of the 13th ntury in connection sometimes with Toxteth and sometimes th the forest of West Derby. Four hundred years later, we id receivers appointed for the crown-rents of Toxteth, Smith- own Moss, and Liverpool; and the name is still perpetuated in mithdown Road, that runs towards Liverpool along the boundary f the townships of Toxteth and West Derby. Smithdown then robably lay west of Derby and north of Toxteth, and contiguous both, and therefore occupied the site of, at any rate, a con- derable portion of Liverpool, which latter name was perhaps onfined at the time of Domesday to the well-known pool or let of the Mersey, now built over, answering to Wallasey Pool n the opposite side of the river. If this be so, the transference f the name from the inlet to the group of houses on its banks s exactly paralleled by the instance of the modern village in Cheshire, which is now called Hoylake, a name formerly applied o the tidal channel washing the coast at that spot. This theory would of course account for the name Liverpool not appearing in Domesday Book. Our learned Secretary, however, believes in n ingenious and probable derivation of the word from a British ource, which would make it the name of a place, and not of a ool, from the very first,

Judging from the scantiness of the information, it would cer- ainly seem as if the Domesday Commissioners had contented hemselves with crossing over from Chester to the king's manor f Derby, and there had gathered sworn information about that Hundred, and gleaned further pieces of knowledge about the five ther Hundreds (especially about the king's land in them), with- ut troubling themselves to penetrate into a part of the country o wild and desolate, and inhabited by people full of a sturdy independence.

IV. When we pass on to the Landlords, we naturally take t those with whom our sympathies lie—the Englishmen, who spoken of in the past tense, some of whom were dead and g before the Domesday survey, but many of whom must have b living on, dispossessed of their lands for no other crime than l for England. The first and foremost of these is, of course, K. Eadward, who (besides being, as it seems, Lord of the Hundre of Warrington, Blackburn, Salford, and Leyland) owned W Derby and six unnamed berewicks or hamlets dependent on th manor, Warrington and three hamlets in that neighbourhoo Blackburn Huncoat and Pendleton in the north-east, Salford a Ratcliffe in the east, Walton-le-dale Leyland and Penwortham the north. These 19 townships belonged to the Confessor, a passed at his death to his nobler successor King Harold, who the compilers of Domesday Book mention as seldom as possibl indeed, when they have to speak of the nine months of his reig they generally use some periphrasis, such as, "after the death "King Eadward, before that King William had come in "England." We, who have been born between Ribble ar Mersey, may be proud to think that our native district must th have contributed largely to the assistance of the one king of th English who has died fighting in defence of his country,—helpe him (we will hope) by both men and means in his struggle again the Norwegian King and the Norman Duke.

The dispossessed Englishmen of lower degree are not name excepting those in the Hundred of West Derby, and one, Game of Rochdale, in the Hundred of Salford. There were man different landholders in the Derby Hundred. One of them wa a lady, Godgifu by name, frenchified into Godiva, but no doub a different person from Earl Leofric's famous wife; whether th name of Teos, the owner of Barton, is feminine or not, I am no scholar enough to say; it is no doubt the French clerk's ignoran way of pronouncing some good old English name. Of one o these landholders we would gladly know more—Uhtred, a grea man in the district, for he held more than 15 townships in the Hundred, viz., Kirkby, Roby, Knowsley, Crosby, Maghull, hton, Kirkdale, Little Woolton, Speke, Litherland, Dalton, lmersdale, Lathom, Lydiate, and Altcar, together with part of risbrick and Marton. We would gladly identify him, if we ld, with one of the Uhtreds of the great House of Eadwulf, h held the northern counties against all the inroads of the es, and for generations ruled Northumberland so inde- dently that up to the eve of the Norman Conquest the writs he king at Winchester did not run north of the Humber—a use which was so famous, that Scotch kings and Galwegian ces and Cumbrian lords were proud of their descent from it, which still exists in the direct male line, the head of it bear- the surname of Nevill, which an ancestor of his took from Norman mother in the twelfth century. Such identification, wever, would be mere guess-work. Gamel of Rochdale may ve been a kinsman of Uhtred, for his name, too, was not known amongst the descendants of Eadwulf of Bamborough, nd he and Uhtred appear to have had rights and liberties not ossessed by all the landlords of the district. We may notice, efore we pass on, that the Uhtred of whom we have been speak- g owned Wallasey, and Wallasey only, on the south bank of the Mersey ; this connection between Wallasey and the land between Ribble and Mersey may allow us to conjecture that the time was ot then far distant when Wallasey had been an island, and when he more important of the two mouths of the Mersey had been where Leasowe Castle now stands, thus leaving Wallasey a part of the Hundred of West Derby rather than of the peninsula of Wirrall.

It is with a certain malicious satisfaction that an Englishman finds that "held," and not "holds," is used of Roger of Poitou himself, to whom the Conqueror had granted the whole land between Ribble and Mersey, together with 210 other manors—398 in all. Roger "of Poitou" was so called from his residence (one would suppose) at his wife's castle in Poitou rather than at his own at Lancaster, or at the one, which he had himself built at Penwortham,—the only castle then existing between Ribble and Mersey,—and doubtless the abode of such oppression and cruelty as he and his knew well how to exercise. Roger married Almodis, Countess, in her own right, of La March Poitou. He was the third son of Roger of Montgomery, was the head of a house connected by "the spindle side" the dukes of Normandy, and who, at the great battle of 1 had been in command of the right wing, which consisted Frenchmen and other "soldiers," i.e. (for the word was then u in its strict sense) mercenaries,—the same Roger of Montgom who, when Earl of Shrewsbury, became the one Norman ro that left his surname to be borne in future ages by a county this island. Roger of Poitou's mother was Mabel Talvas, heiress of the chiefest of all Norman families in power and wickedness, "small in stature, talkative, clever, and witty" the old chronicler calls her), guilty of fearful crimes and doom to a fearful end; she passed on her evil nature to her eldest s the famous or infamous Robert of Belesme, Earl of Shrewsbu and Arundel in England, Count of Ponthieu and Alencon France, a horrible tyrant of the worst feudal type, who dr down upon himself the hatred of our English forefathers in more abundant measure than did any other Norman oppress But, if the wickedness of the family culminated in Robert Belesme, we cannot say much to the credit of his young brother, Roger of Poitou. In 1077, forgetful of what he owe to the Conqueror, he espoused the cause of King William rebellious son Robert, and was deprived of his English posse sions, the revenues of which William, with characteristic gri pleasantry, employed in hiring mercenaries to fight against thei former owner.

Thus, when Domesday Book was compiled, the King himsel held the land between Ribble and Mersey; and the names of the few tenants mentioned as having received lands from Roger o Poitou (Ralph, Tetbald, Osmund, Adelard, and others,) are too insignificant to detain us, with the exception of two, who apparently held between them the Hundred of Blackburn, and whose descendants still own estates between Ribble and Mersey. The first of these is Roger de Busli or Bussel, afterwards Baron

Penwortham, whose descendant, Avice Bussel, just before the 1279, brought to her husband, William ffarington, as her riage portion half the manor of Leyland, which is still held her descendants in the male line; and the second is Albert slet or Gresley, the founder of a family which held Manchester h the days of the Conqueror to those of Edward II., when n, its heiress, carried that barony into the house of De la rr; it was from these Gresleys that the great Lancashire family Assheton received that carucate of land in Ashton-under-Lyne, ch gave them their surname, when Emma Gresley became the e of the Englishman, Orm, the son of Eadward.

To return, however, to Roger of Poitou. He was afterwards nstated in his lordships by William the Red, but, joining in the surrection of his elder brother against Henry I., he once more st all his English fiefs in 1103, and England finally got rid of e house of Montgomery, though both Robert and Roger left ildren to inherit in France the lands, the power, and the evil ame, of their forefathers.

V. I have already tried your patience too much, and can ly allow myself a word about the churches. The only two hurches alluded to in the Derby Hundred are Childwall, under which name we read "there was a priest, having half a carucate 'of land," and Walton-on-the-Hill with twice that amount of glebe. Newton Hundred was much smaller than Derby, but we hear of two churches there also, Wigan and Winwick; "the 'church of the same manor had one carucate of land, and "S. Oswald of the same vill had two carucates;" it is well known that the rectors of those two churches are still considerable owners of glebe-land. In Warrington Hundred, Warrington church is the only one mentioned, and was called then, as now, S. Elphin. Blackburn and Whalley were the churches of the north-eastern Hundred; Leyland Church stood alone in its Hundred; whilst in Salford Hundred we find "the church of "S. Mary and the church of S. Michael;" the former of these is the "old church" at Manchester; as to the latter, Mr. Beamont hesitatingly identifies it with the ancient church of S. Mic Ashton-under-Lyne, which was within the original paris Manchester. There can, I should think, be little doubt a the truth of this conjecture; it is certainly preferable to Whitaker's idea of a S. Michael's Church at Aldport, in M chester,—a church, the very existence of which remains to proved. Mr. Whitaker adduces the two Manchester fair demonstrate the existence of two Manchester churches, because neither of these fairs coincides with the Feast o Michael, he attempts to shew that Michaelmas day was at time held in April; the great thing, that he does prove, is length, to which a man will go θέσιν διαφυλάττων, in support favourite theory.

It is pleasant to think that at any rate there were ten times many churches as there were castles in this district, and indeed is possible that, besides these ten, other churches may ha existed; but still the parishes between Ribble and Mersey in t eleventh century must have been very much like what Sou African parishes are now, and, where we have in these days t busy hum of huge towns and overgrown villages without numb in those days there seems to have been nothing but the silen of a vast solitude. Indeed we know that great tracts were unin habited, for we read of a forest in the Manor of Derby, (th predecessor probably of the extra-parochial district of Croxteth two more in connection with some of Uhtred's manors, (one which is now perhaps represented by Simonswood, which is als extra-parochial,) a fourth at Lathom, two more at Melling an Lydiate, and another at Woolton,—seven in the Derby Hundre alone. In the little Hundred of Newton there was a fores 15 miles long and 9 broad, and another almost as large in Salford Hundred, whilst two are mentioned in each of th
Hundreds of Leyland and Blackburn.

The country had indeed been more civilized a short time before than it was at the time of the Domesday survey. "In King
"Eadward's time" the six Hundreds were "worth £145 2s. 2d.;
"when Roger of Poitou received it from the king, it was worth

120"; in the same way the fifteen drenghes of Newton Hun- had been diminished to six; though all this, of course, is as ing compared with the terrible devastation that had fallen n Yorkshire, which then included Lancashire north of the ble. The accounts that we have of William's harrying of the ntry in 1069 are graphic enough, but they are outdone by the ionless witness of Domesday, where the significant word aste" is attached to Yorkshire manors through page after page. ake the Lancashire Hundred of Amounderness as an instance, it, as I have just said, in those days belonged to Yorkshire; Survey reckons up 62 manors in that Hundred, which had nged to Earl Tostig, King Harold's brother, and had after- ds been granted by the Conqueror to Roger of Poitou, and n it quietly adds :—"Sixteen of these have a few people living n them, but we do not know how many; the rest are waste"! rhaps the missing drenghes of Newton Hundred, and many other valiant man from the land between Ribble and Mersey, re amongst the large body of Englishmen who made their way Constantinople, and there, in the service of the eastern mperors of the House of Komnênos, they not uncommonly d the satisfaction of meeting in open battle the kinsmen of eir conquerors, for the Norman invader in the eleventh century und the shores of Epeiros guarded by the axes of Englishmen o less than the hills of Sussex; and the strangely abiding tie, hich the Waring (or Varangian) Guard thus formed between ngland and the New Rome, lasted until the death-throes of the yzantine empire, when Harold, the son of Godwine at length ound a worthy compeer in Constantine Palaiologos.

Under such a ruler as Roger of Poitou the value of the district would rapidly decline still further, and civilisation would go back- ward, and even Christianity relax a little of its former hold upon he people. So indeed we may gather from the startling fact that the fine for violence against the weaker sex was, between the Ribble and Mersey, only one quarter of what it was in Cheshire, no more, in fact, than the fine imposed on one who wilfully absented himself from the shire-moot; thus, too, in Cheshire certain offenders paid a double fine if the offence was comm on a Sunday or during a holy season; but all days were estee alike in the wilder district north of the Mersey.

With this rather dreary view of the churchmanship and of prosperity of our predecessors here in the eleventh centur must conclude. I have kept you long enough, and must abs from touching upon further points of interest. But may I whether any Liverpool man can prove himself the heir of a cer Æthelmund, of whom Domesday speaks? for, if so, he m lay claim to a property which has considerably increased in v during the last 800 years. "Æthelmund," we are told, " " Smithdown," i.e., as we have already seen, Liverpool; "it "worth 32d." !

RECENT ROMAN DISCOVERIES IN LANCASHIRE AND CHESHIRE.

By the late W. Thompson Watkin.

(Read 10th March, 1887.)

SINCE reading my last paper on this subject (Nov. 13th, 1884), the discoveries of Roman remains in the two counties have not been very extensive, though some of them are of considerable interest; and I now propose to embody information brought to light from MSS., &c., hitherto unpublished, as well as the actual discoveries of the last two years.

LANCASHIRE.

Here a singular fact has first to be noticed. When writing my work on the Roman remains of the county, I stated at p. 238, on the authority of Mr. Hardwick in his History of Preston, and various newspaper reports, that in 1840, a hoard of 400 Roman silver coins, denarii, had been found near the landmark at Rossall Point, Fleetwood. They were reported by Mr. Hardwick and others to be of the reigns of Vespasian, Titus, Domitian, Nerva, Trajan, Hadrian, Sabina, Antoninus Pius, Faustina, Severus, and Caracalla, consequently ranging from A.D. 70 to about A.D. 217; and they were said to have been in the possession of Sir Hesketh Fleetwood, at Rossall Hall (h purchased at the sale of his effects by Alderman Brow Preston), with the exception of about forty, which came into possession of the late Rev. W. Thornber.

I found out immediately before the publication of my b that the hoard owned by Alderman Brown was still in possession of his son, Dr. Brown, but it was too late to give particulars. After the issue of the work, however, Dr. Br presented the coins (401 in number) to the Museum at Pres but very singularly they turn out to be a hoard of an ent different date, ranging from about A.D. 353 to A.D. 408, and of the following emperors :—Constantius II., 14; Julianus, Valentinianus I., 15; Valens, 46; Gratianus, 64; Mag
Maximus, 11; Flavius Victor (son of Maximus), 6; Val
tinianus II., 8; Theodosius I., 19: Eugenius, 14; Arcadius, 11
Honorius, 52; illegible, 1; fragmentary, 10. This list prov the hoard to be the latest in point of date yet found in Lancashir and they were probably concealed in the first decade of the fift century, at the time of the abandonment of Britain by th Roman forces. Some of them, especially those of Flavius Victo and Eugenius, are very rare. The number (14) of those of th latter emperor is particularly noticeable.

But the question arises, can this be the hoard described b
Mr. Hardwick? In the 6th volume of this Society's Transactions
p. 108, Mr. Thornber says, "In the Fleetwood set of coins
"Vespasians were not uncommon." It is hardly possible tha both Mr. Hardwick and Mr. Thornber could mistake coins o Constantius II. and his successors for those of Vespasian and Titus, some three centuries earlier; and if not, there can be but one alternative, i.e., that two hoards were found at the same place, one of the Higher, the other of the Lower Empire; unless the hoard presented to the Preston Museum came from some other part of the country.

An urn of the Britanno-Roman period, of rude pottery, has been found, so I am informed, by Mr. Wilkinson, of Burnley, at the upper end of the Swindon valley, in that neighbourhood, to where the Roman forts called "Ringstones Camp" and ...wist Castle" (described at pp. 210, 211 of Roman Lancashire) ...t. It was about 3 feet beneath the surface, and within a rude ...e chamber, 18 inches square. The urn contained calcined ...es, believed to be those of a mother and child, and a bronze ... and was covered by a stone, on which lay a deposit of bones ... charcoal.

... Roman inscription which refers to the Roman regiment ...ch at one time garrisoned Lancaster, the Ala Sebusiana, or ...nd ala of the Gauls, has been found during restorations at ...urn Church, Westmoreland. I exhibit a photograph of the ...e, the inscription on which is rather puzzling, and very ...perfect, being only a fragment of the original. Sufficient, ...wever, remains to shew that the Ala Petriana, together with ...e Ala Sebusiana, restored a bath, &c., which had collapsed from ...e. We cannot gather the date, there being no clue to it.

CHESHIRE.

Turning now to Cheshire, I will first take Chester itself. In ...y last paper I announced that Mr. Frederick Bullin, of Chester, ...o owned the site of the large Roman building discovered in ...hite Friars in 1884, had promised me to pull down a stable on ...e opposite side of Bolland's Court, with the view of ascertaining ...hether the Roman building extended in that direction. He ...as proceeding to do so, intending to erect a building of much ...eater elevation and proportions, when he was restrained by an ...junction obtained in Chancery by a property owner on the ...pposite side of White Friars, on the ground that it would ...terfere with his light. Determined, however, to solve the ...uestion, Mr. Bullin had excavations made in the floor of the ...uilding, into which I had the pleasure of descending, and which ...roved that not only the Roman building and street extended ...cross the site, but that the church of the destroyed White ...riars monastery likewise covered the same ground, the layer of ...ediæval glazed tiles, which formed its floor, being found to exist ...bove the Roman level, at this side of Bolland's Court as well as on the other. The plan which I exhibit, and which has engraved on a small scale for my former paper, shews the re obtained.

Amongst various fragments of tiles found there, was which bore the name of "IVLIVS," a drawing of which I exh It has probably had two lines of inscription, the upper naming either the 20th legion or one of its auxiliary corps lower one the name of the maker, of which "IVLIVS" for part. A similar instance occurs at the large Roman static Maryport in Cumberland. A very singular sculptured stone found at the depth of seven feet near the same spot, bu much worn that it is almost impossible to make out the figu Some have thought that they resemble the figure of a sn being thrust through by a sword, the latter implement being h by a human hand and arm. It is only a fragment, but in i present state is 24½ inches wide, and on one side 22½ inche high, being broken diagonally from the base of this side nearl to the top. Its thickness is 1 foot.

The extent of frontage of the building which has bee traced is 54 feet, without termination at either end, but its purpos has not yet been ascertained.

On the 10th June, 1886, whilst workmen were engaged i excavating for a new gas-holder on the Roodeye, about 50 yard distant from the river, they found in a bed of river gravel, whicl was covered by about 20 feet of silt, a number of oaken piles logs of wood, &c., which seemed to have been the remains of wooden pier, and amongst them were two human skulls, frag ments of "Samian" ware and Upchurch pottery, part of layer of concrete, "first brass" coins of Vespasian and Titu (with others), and a pig of lead. This latter is 24 inches in length at its base, and upon its upper or inscribed surface 20 inches, in thickness it is 4½ inches, its breadth at the base is 5 inches, and on the inscribed face 3 inches. The inscription is

IMP. VESP. AVG. V. T. IMP. III. **

The letters are 1½ inches in height, with triangular stops, and the termination of the inscription (marked by asterisks), a has been effaced by the oxidation of a small "lump" of n upon it, has no doubt been, as in other inscriptions, cos ;

ably the o has been made small and placed within the c.
n the side of the block are the words, DE. CEANGI.
the exception that the word AVG*(usto)* is added in that on principal face, the two inscriptions are identical with that on pig of lead now preserved at Eaton Hall, found about a mile the city in September, 1838, and is of the date A.D. 74, n Vespasian for the fifth time, and Titus for the third time, Consuls ; and the inscriptions read Imperatore Vespasiano usto quinto Tito Imperatore tertio consulibus and de Ceangi(s) ectively ; the last one proving that the lead of which it was nposed was from the territories of the Ceangi or Cangi. The ght of the pig is 192lbs. Possibly either the western side of Roodeye estuary originally extended to the point where the was found, or the wooden pier, known to have been carried stwards from near the Watergate into the estuary, extended us far, though in either case the main channel must have been ltered. It is a matter that will cause much discussion.

In June, 1885, during excavations in Newgate Street, two agments of inscribed tiles were found, bearing the termination f inscriptions. One was, —NTO ; the other, —ANTO. There an be little doubt but that these are portions of tiles which when entire have borne the usual stamp of the twentieth egion, with the addition of ANTO for Antoniniana. In fact, in he second one, part of the V, standing for Victrix, is visible igulate with the A. It is the first intimation we have that the wentieth legion took the title, though many other corps did so.
The second legion at Caerleon has expressed it upon its tiles in a still shorter manner, LEG. II. AVG. ANT. being all that is given ;
and the sixth legion at York was equally concise, SEV. and GOR.
standing respectively for Severiana and Gordiana, after the other titles of the corps.

In June, 1886, the workmen engaged in making a connecting sewer between Black Friars and the intercepting sewer on the Roodeye, after having excavated under the walls at the end of Black Friars, and a little way up that street, found beneath the centre of the roadway, at 13 feet below the present surface, the remains of a Roman Hypocaust. It was opposite the house occupied by Mrs. Blackburne. The plans I exhibit will shew the chief features, but the building could only be partially examined, the trench cut being only 2 feet 6 inches wide. It was, however, satisfactorily ascertained that the external length of the room (as I take it to be only a portion of a villa) was 26 feet, and the internal length 19 feet 8 inches. The breadth was not ascertainable. The walls were 2 feet 9 inches to 3 feet thick. Two of the pillars were found in position, and the remains of others could be traced. The former were at the semicircular west end of the building, and supported a floor of concrete 6 inches thick, which was 5 feet 3 inches in length, terminating in a squared worked edge. I think this had been covered by a tesselated pavement, which has been destroyed, as in the case of other villas, e.g., that at Medbourne, Leicestershire. The floor on which the pillars stood was likewise formed of concrete, and each pillar was composed, first of a base tile 16 inches long, by 10½ inches wide, and 2 inches thick; then seven tiles which formed the shaft, each 8 inches square; above these were two other tiles forming the cap, the lowest being 1 foot square and 1½ inches thick, the upper one 17 inches square and 2 inches thick, and these were covered by large tiles 2 feet square, reaching from pillar to pillar. The pillars were 1 foot 8 inches high, and 14 inches apart.

Near the walls of the building, it was noticed that stone slabs, cut exactly of the same shape and dimensions as the tiles, formed the pillars. Remains of flue tiles were found, but not in situ. The distance from the inside of the city wall to the semicircular end of this building is 63 feet, and from the outside 68 feet. No Roman work was visible in the city wall when the sewer was cut beneath or through it. The floor of the hypocaust is 21 feet above the level of the Roodeye, and the soil above is entirely "made ground," full of fragments of Roman debris, including fragments of tiles and bones, both animal and human. Several vere found, one of silver, and one of Constantine. A nt of tile found bore the inscription—

taken in connection with another fragment found some since at Chester, inscribed

LEG. XX.
ZVBLO.

ests that the reading may be either Sub Loco Praedii, or Sub Privato, but it is as yet rather premature to pronounce on the ect. It cannot, however, be Sub Loco Praetorii, as some of rchæological friends in France have asserted, for the building which it belonged was outside of the castrum, whilst the etorium would be in the centre of the latter. The discovery further proves what I have frequently asserted, that (unless in Roman times a town wall, and not that of the castrum, closed this portion of the modern city, as at Lincoln) the stern slope of the hill upon which Chester is built was covered villas and their private cemeteries, which extended to the ter's edge, i.e., the modern Roodeye.

Another fact which has only recently been made public, is that, Eccleston, near Chester, and close to a large mound (or botonius) of the Roman period, there was found at the beginning of is century a hoard of 43 silver denarii. They were for a long me in the possession of Mr. G. Cuitt (author of a history of hester), and were afterwards owned by the late Mr. W. Ayrton, that city, a well known antiquary. They are still in the ossession of his widow; and in August last, by her kindness, I ad the pleasure of inspecting them, when I found that the llowing emperors and empresses were thus represented:— espasian 1, Domitian 2, Nerva 1, Trajan 15, Hadrian 6, abina 1, Antoninus Pius 7, Faustina (senior) 3, Marcus Aurelius 5, austina (junior) 2. As the latest coins are very fresh looking, nd little worn, I conclude that they were hidden in the great nsurrection in the reign of Commodus, the successor of Marcus Aurelius, who is the latest emperor embraced in the series. I am glad to say that the revelation of this "find" was the first r of the issue of my Roman Cheshire. A second result is interesting. It arose as follows. At pp. 298-9 of the wo record the existence, from the Foote Gower MSS. in the B Museum, of a large Roman camp at Hulme Wallfield, Congleton, perfectly visible in 1725, but destroyed by r

Mr. Thos. Cooper, late Mayor of Congleton, has given me ticulars of a charter to that town (without date, but whic internal evidence must be between 1313 and 1316), by Edw in which "the way which leads from Yeyton (or Eaton) Cas is mentioned. As there is no record whatever of any medi castle existing at Eaton, nor any remains of it, whilst the pla in juxtaposition to what Foote Gower describes as the la Roman camp at Hulme Wallfield, there can, I think, be li doubt, but that they are one and the same. We have ma instances of this inversion of terms, e.g., the earthwork (British in the Broxton Hills is called "Maiden Castle," and the British camp at Bucton is styled "Bucton Castle." The witnesses t this charter include Sir Hugh de Audeley, Richard de Fouleshurs (Sheriff of Cheshire), Sir Symon Tuschet, William de Venables Richard de Moreton, Randle de Astbury, Richard the Clerk, an others.

From vols. 2014, 2084, and 2111 of the Harleian MSS. I hav found that in the reign of Charles I. a Roman Hypocaust, evi dently belonging to a villa, was discovered in the grounds of Mr Crewe, of Crewe, near Farndon. It was 12 feet square, and 5 fee beneath the surface. Its pillars seem to have been composed o flue tiles entirely, probably, as in other cases, filled with mortar and the large tiles of the roof bore the well-known stamp of th twentieth legion (LEG. XX. V.V.) (See Roman Cheshire, p. 306.)

Additional evidence as to the existence of a Roman station a Stockport has also been forthcoming, by the publication of D Stukeley's Diaries (Surtees' Society's publications, vol. 76, p. 5 where it is said:—"January, 1750-1, Mr. Peel, an office r
"Excise, sent me a coyn of Honorius, taken up on remov a
"some rubbish at Stockport on the Mersey, in Cheshire.
"A garland, VOT."

larch, 1886, whilst "breaking a clod" in a field, close to Mill," between Alvanley and Dunham-on-the-Hill, a fine oin of Nero and a jewelled ring were found. The latter sappeared, but the former is in the possession of Mr. phreys, a resident in the neighbourhood, who recently sent r my inspection. It has: Obverse, Head of the emperor to right—NERO CAESAR AVGVSTVS; Reverse, Jupiter seated to eft, holding a thunderbolt in the right hand, a sceptre in the with the legend, IVPPITER CVSTOS. [The two P's in the word ter frequently occur in this type of coin.] The coin is a very preserved one, and weighs 113 grains, being the same weight he fine gold aureus of Vitellius found at Wigan, now preserved his Society's cases at the Mayer Museum, Liverpool.

n opening the ground for laying the line of pipes for the new rnwy water supply, at Eaton, near Tarporley, fragments of man tiles, mortar with the usual pounded tile in it, and a first ss coin of Marcus Aurelius were found, about twelve months ce. The coin was sent for my inspection. It is highly patited, and has: Obverse, M. AVR. ANTONINVS. TR. P. COS, head of nperor to right. Reverse, VOTA. SOL. DECENN. II., a figure crificing at an altar, between the letters S. C. It is in the possession of a Mr. Fotherby, in the neighbourhood. The site has obably been that of a Roman villa, only just touched upon by e excavators.

Lastly, I have again to refer to the ten Roman coins, ranging om the time of Augustus to that of Constantine II., found at 'ston, near Halton, and described by me at a recent meeting of he Society.

ERRATA.

A careful study of Moreri's great work shews that the w of "Foreign Quarterings in Lancashire Shields"* has been mi by Dethick, Queen Elizabeth's "Garter King of Arms." quetta's descent from the families named is established, as is descent from her of the Greys, Egertons, Woodcocks, a Stanleys: but she was not her father's heir, for her brother's so continued the male line of the House of Luxemburg: her de scendants, therefore, have no claim to use her achievement Dethick is also wrong in making the mother of Margaret de Bau an heiress; her name was Suève (not Justine, as stated in th text), and she was the daughter (but not the heir) of Nichola Orsini, Count of Nola, whose grandmother Anastasia was a granddaughter (and the representative) of Simon de Montfort Earl of Leicester.

It might also be added that a tract, published at Augsburg in 1605, and called "Regum Neapolitanorum vita et effigies, "auctore B.G.," which is now in the Bodleian Library, gives the arms of the Norman kings of Sicily as "Argent, two bendlets "checky, Azure and of the field." This has been followed in the engraving, for which the writer desires to take this opportunity of thanking his friend, Mr. W. C. A. Pritt. A. E. P. G.

DESCENT OF THE MASCYS OF RIXTON, IN THE COUNTY OF LANCASTER.

(FROM ORIGINAL DOCUMENTS.)

By Mrs. Arthur Cecil Tempest.

A few time ago, whilst searching in the muniment safe at Broughton Hall, in Craven, I came across a schedule, made 1786, of the deeds then in the possession of Mr. Stephen Tempest of that place. By that schedule I discovered there was, the date of its making, a consecutive series of deeds relating the Mascys of Rixton, in Lancashire, dating from their first connection with the Rixtons to the death of the last of the line. Tempted by the descriptions, I searched for the originals; but they were nowhere to be found amongst the other Tempest papers. Determined, if possible, to trace them, I have succeeded finding 120 out of some 255, and live in hopes of the others being some day returned to their proper resting place.

In 1837, 135 of the most ancient were lent to Mr. Joseph Francis Tempest, F.S.A., who does not appear to have returned them, as his acknowledgment, giving the numbers, &c., remains the box in which the other deeds were found. Mr. Joseph Tempest is now dead; but fortunately he made full transcripts of the 135 deeds he borrowed, to which copies, through the courtesy of his widow, I have had full access; thus, wi exception of about six unimportant ones, which were a missing in 1837, I have been able to go through the series.

In addition to the deeds scheduled, I found a bunc 119 various deeds and papers, relating chiefly to the M property in Warrington; also a number of old leases. these materials I have extracted the following sketch o family of "Mascy of Rixton" and their possessions. In refe to the various deeds, I describe those in the Schedule as while those in the miscellaneous bundle are distinguished by

The Village of Rixton in Lancashire, situated near the b of the Mersey, about five and a half miles E.N.E. of Warring anciently provided a surname for a family who, from the time King John, held largely there under the Pincernas (Butlers) a their successors. (Testa de Nevil, &c.)

Hamon de Mascy. 1330.

I. In the reign of Edward III. KATHERINE DE RIXTO daughter and coheiress of one Alan lord of Rixton, intermarrie with HAMON DE MASCY, son of Robert de Mascy of Tattoi descended from Hamon, fourth Baron of Dunham Massey, an thereby founded the family whose pedigree I propose to trace.

The earliest Mascy charter preserved amongst the Tempes records, is one dated at Mere, Saturday, 29th September, A.D 1330, by which Hamon le Mascy de Tatton (as he describes himself) grants to Gilbert de Leigh, chaplain, all his goods moveable and immoveable, and his land in the town of Mer (W. 16).

Hamon Mascy's marriage with Katherine de Rixton probably took place between Michaelmas, 1332, and the January following. By an indenture, dated Monday, the Vigil of St. Michael, A.D. 1332, Alan de Rixton enfeoffed "Robert fil. Alan de Rixton," of all his manor of Rixton, a moiety of the manor of Glasebroc, with certain homages, services, and the reversion of a messuage and land in Rixton (held for life by Robert de Moston), rendering yearly to Alan and his heirs 200li in silver (R. 55).

By an indenture of fine, dated at Westminster, in the Octave of St. Michael in the same year, Alan de Rixton settles and entails his manor of Rixton, the moiety of Glasebrok, the reversion of the premises held by Robert de Moston, with the services and homages of Alan de le Hagh, William Malotesone (elsewhere called fil. Matilde), and Margaret, daughter of Henry Betokson (elsewhere called fil. Beatrice), all which he had previously granted to Robert fil. Alan de Rixton, on himself and his male heirs, on failure of whom, on his daughters Katherine, Sibilla, Elizabeth, Emma, Matilda, Margaret, and Agnes, and on their heirs male in succession. In default, on Richard de Rixton and his heirs male, with remainder to the right heirs of the said Alan de Rixton (R. 56). This fine of settlement I take to have been made prior to the marriage between Hamon le Mascy with Alan's daughter. By Monday after St. Hillary, 6 Edward III (18th January, 1332-3), they were man and wife; as the wording of the following deed shews, by which Alan de Rixton grants to Hamon de Mascy de Tatton and Katherine "my daughter his wife," the mediety of the manor of Glasebrok, with the services of William fil. Matilda de Glasebrok and of Margaret, daughter of Henry Betoccessone To be held by Hamon and Katherine his wife and their heirs male, of Alan and his heirs, rendering a Rose at Midsummer, and doing the customary service to the lord of the fee. The witnesses to this deed are Richard Wolston, Richard Brege (Bruche), Richard de Rixton, and Robert de Moston. The seal is of red wax, and has on a shield A bend charged with three covered cups, circumscribed "SIG : ALANI DE RIXTON." (R. 57.)

There appear to have been some further arrangements bet' Hamon and his father-in-law; for an Indenture, in old Fren 18th January, 1332-3, witnesses (apparently to qualify the° or to explain its uses), that an agreement had been entere4, between Alayn de Rixton and Hamon le fitz Robert de ed de Tatton, that Hamon should take to wife Katherine, d:

of the said Alayn, and that on the solemnization of the marriage Hamon should pay Alan £40, in consideration of which Hamon leases to Alan for five years at a rent of four marks yearly, the moiety of Glasebrok manor, which had just been granted to him and his wife. Further arrangements are agreed on, in case Alan should have male issue surviving, as to the payment of a portion to Katherine in lieu of the moiety of Glasebrok, which she was only to inherit on failure of her father's male heirs. This is attested by the same witnesses, and in addition by Robert de Sonkey and Richard de Martinescroft. (R. 60.) The arrangements do not seem to have been quite satisfactory, for on 17th February, 7 Edward III, Alan confirms the grant of the moiety of Glasebrok to his daughter Katherine and her husband Hamon, son of Robert le Massy de Tatton, but instead of the Rose at Midsummer, they are to pay six shillings and eightpence yearly to Alan for his life (R. 58); Hamon on the same day confirming the lease of the moiety for five years to his father-in-law Alan de Rixton. (R. 57b.)

In addition to Katherine and her six sisters, Alan de Rixton had a son Alan, who died without issue. An Indenture made 24th May, 7 Edward III, between Alayn de Rixton and John le fitz Richard de Radeclif, witnesses that the said John, Margery "le Dame de Bury," Richard son of William de Radecliff, Richard son of Richard le Redych, Thomas del Dene de Makerfeld, Thomas del Bury de Hinderlegh, William de Lynaker de Hinderlegh, Elys Huddeson, and Thomas son of Richard are bound to Alan in forty marks. Alan now agrees that if Elizabeth, who was wife of "Alan le fitz le dit Alayn," will not enter, nor claim during her life the moiety of the manor of Glazebrook, or its appurtenances, which Alan the son had of the said Alan the father, nor disturb Hamon de Mascy de Tatton and Katherine his wife, nor their heirs, in the said moiety, he, Alan, will annul the bond for the forty marks; John son of Richard de Radecliff undertaking that if Elizabeth does so disturb, he and his heirs shall be responsible; binding himself to Hamon and Katherine de Mascy to make good and restore any such intrusion. (R. 59.)

On 6th October, 1341, Hamon, son of Robert Mascy of Tatton, with others, entered into a recognizance to Henry de Trafford, and John de Pirye, of 110 marks yearly, for the farm of the Manor of Frodsham, to be held by them for sixteen years. (36th Report Dep. Keeper Public Rec., p. 463.) Sir Peter Leycester states that the Hamon le Mascy who was Escheator of Cheshire 6 Edward III, was the husband of Katherine de Rixton, and that in 1342 he represented Oliver de Ingham (the purchaser of the reversion of Dunham Massy) in a suit. (Ormerod's Hist. Cheshire, New Ed., vol. 1, p. 522.) If Leycester is correct in his assertion, the affidavit made by Richard de Chorlton in 1375 points to Hamon's father, Robert Mascy of Tatton, being a son of Hamon Mascy sixth Baron of Dunham Massy, and not as represented in the History of Cheshire a grandson of Hamon, the fourth baron. De Chorlton swears that forty years before (1335), Sir Hamon de Mascy. Knt., Lord of Dunham Massy, was at Kelsale, and died there in his presence, "and that his son Hamon "took the seal of his deceased father" and conveyed it across the sea to Burdecos [Bordeaux ?], and in the presence of him, the said Richard, gave it to Sir Oliver de Ingham, Knt., &c. (Harl. MSS., cod. 2038, fol. 23B.) It is also stated that in 1347 he was described as knight. Sir Hamon died about 1360, as amongst the fines paid to Henry, Duke of Lancaster, in the tenth year of his dukedom, was one for a recognizance of a debt of eighty marks by Katherine, widow of Hamo le Mascy, chiv^r, to Thomas del Bothe. (32nd Report Dep. Keeper P.R., p. 340.) This also proves that Katherine de Rixton outlived her husband.

Richard le Mascy. 1384.

II. Richard le Mascy de Rixton, who appears to have been the son of the above-named Sir Hamon, as we find him in possession of Rixton manor in 1384, gave evidence in the "Scrope and Grosvenor" controversy, and was then declared to be aged thirty-eight years and more in October, 1386. He would, therefore, be born about 1348. As Sir Hamon was married in 1332, there were possibly older children, of whom per John le Mascy, living in 1364, was one, to whom on the Tue before St. Laurence the Martyr, 38 Edward III, Isabella, widow of Alan de Rixton, granted all her lands, teneme rents, services, and free tenancies in Rixton and Glazebr with the lands and tenements (held of her in the same plac Roger Banastre) To be held by him for her life, renderin her yearly nine marks in silver, and performing all custo services to the lord of the fee. The seal is of green wax, bears a shield, *Quarterly, first and fourth a mullet, second and th

lozengy, over all a fess*, circumscribed "SIGILL : JOHIS LE MASC (R. 66.) On the 11th March, 1385, a certain John Mascy h letters of protection on his going to Spain in the retinue John, Duke of Castile.

Who Isabella de Rixton, the widow, was, I have not di covered, unless she and the Elizabeth de Rixton named in th deed with the Radcliffs, 24th May, 7 Edward III (R. 59), a the same.

Richard le Mascy was "of Rixton" in the 6th year
Richard II, as he then granted to Henry de Rixton an Alexander de Lynalis, in fee, his manor of Rixton and moiet of Glasebrok (R. 77). From the evidence Richard le Masc gave as to Sir Robert Grosvenor's right to the "Bend Or," w gather that he had fought under the banner of the illustriou Edward III; and probably the occasion of which he speaks when he noticed Grosvenor bear the debated coat of arms, wa on his first introduction to camp life, at the time when the kin sailed from Sandwich for France, the 28th October, 1359, accom panied by eleven hundred transports, and the most numerou and best appointed army which had been raised in England fo more than a century. He would either be in the train of S William Boteler, his superior lord of Rixton, or in that of John
Duke of Lancaster, whose tenant he also was, under the Halto
Fee. I am inclined to suppose the latter; for on 26th August, 4
Edward III, the Black Prince, as Earl of Chester, gave letters o protection to "Richard de Mascy de Rixton" on his going into

h Wales for the defence of "Beaumarreys Castle" (38th rt Dep. Keeper P. R., p. 70); and we know from the various rs printed in Rymer's Fœdera, that the Duke of Lancaster at different times, just previous to this date, been enjoined rtify his castles in Wales.

here appears to have been some connection between the cys and the Warburtons at this date, for on the 17th June, ichard II, Geoffrey fil. Hugh de Werburton grants to William Werburton de Sutton the land and premises in Rixton and sebroc, which he had of the feoffment and gift of William de ton. The witnesses to this deed being William de Athirton, r, Thomas Gerard, Alan de Rixton, John de Rixton, and xander de Lynalis. The seal has on a shield between the ers H. W., two lions passant. (R 75.) William de Werbur- de Sutton, on the Monday before St. John the Baptist, 8 hard II, granted these same lands, &c., to Gilbert de Rixton Thomas fil. Geoffrey de Werburton, Knt. senior, sealing the rter with a shield bearing Two chevrons and a canton, circum- bed SIGIL : WILLI : DE WERBURTON (R. 74), and on the 9th y, 8 Richard II, these two last named Released to Richard ssi de Rixton all claim to the same lands, which they had of feoffment of William de Werburton de Sutton, in Rixton and sebrok. Of the two seals attached to the Release, one is plain l the other has a shield bearing On a chief a trefoil slipped, paled with a bend, circumscribed THOMAS WARBIRTON (R. 80.) e same day, William de Werburton de Sutton also gives a lease to Richard Massy de Rixton of the same lands in Rixton d Glasebrok, which he had of the feoffment of Geoffrey fil. gh de Werburton. The seal bears a similar shield of arms to t attached to No. R. 80, only the legend around is SIGILL : LLI : DE WERBIRTON. (R. 81.) Possibly these releases, &c., re consequent on the death of an elder brother of Richard ascy, or perhaps on his marriage.

In December, 1384, Richard le Mascy de Rixton enfeoffed hn del Wyche, chaplain, Richard de Boseley, John de Hale, d Gylowe le French, of all his lands and tenements in Rixton and Glasebrok "que quondam fuerint Wiłłi' de Rixton que

Richard, John, and Gylowe, &c. Witnessed by . . . . de Rixt Gilbert del Bruche, Nicholas de Rixton, and Thomas Sonky. T seal bears a shield, Quarterly, in the first and fourth quart
a mullet, circumscribed SIGILLUM HAMONIS DE MASSY. (R. 8 William de Rixton released to Richard le Mascy de Rixt in July, 8 Richard II, his claim to these premises in Rixt and Glasebrok, which his father Matthew de Rixton had the feoffment of Hugh le Strong, chaplain, (R. 83) and at same time Hugh le Strong releases the same to Richard le Mas describing the premises as held of the feoffment of Henry Rixton and Alexander de Lynalis, (R. 78) they being the t trustees to whom Richard le Mascy had in 1382 granted h manor of Rixton and moiety of Glasebrok.

I have thought it possible that Richard Mascy's first wife was Warburton, though I find no such marriage suggested in any the Warburton pedigrees that I have seen; for, besides the tran actions I have already quoted between the Warburtons an Mascys, which seem to point to some relationship, Richard grandson, William Mascy, had to obtain a dispensation for h marriage with Petronilla Warburton, as they were related in t fourth degree.

In Mr. Beamont's Records of the Honour of Halton, mentio is made that, when, in 1385, John Duke of Lancaster, Baron Halton, set out for Spain to claim his throne of Castile and Léo a Richard Mascy, one of his tenants of Halton, who engage to accompany him, drew back and refused to go. Thi Richard Mascy was of Rixton, and he was doubtless no allowed to evade his foreign service without the finding o substitutes. By two receipts preserved amongst the Rixton deed
I gather that Thomas de Torbek de Melling and William Orede bury were these substitutes. By one receipt, dated at Werynton Wednesday before St. Matthias the Apostle, 13 Richard II

phanna, widow of Thomas de Torbok de Mellyng, his executrix, knowledges she has received from Richard le Massy de Rixton, mes denar. p'dco Thom debit. p vadiis suis cũ Joñe Rege Castell. Duc. Lanc. in ultio viagio suo in Spannia." (R 84.) similar acquittance was given by William le Spencer, chaplain, d Agnes, wife of William Oredebery, the Saturday after St. lentine's day, 13 Richard II. (W. 35.) Perhaps it was in nnection with this voyage that the Duke of Lancaster had tained Richard Mascy and promised him "dys livres de la monoye d'engletre p an." for life. (Duchy of Lanc. Reg., fo. 116.)

It may not be uninteresting to record the names of the tenants nder the Rixton manor, taken from an old Court Roll, dated uesday, the feast of St. Martin, 1 Henry IV, namely:—Richard e Smyth, Richard le Shepherd, Robert de Fexley, Robert de Voley, Gillowe le Frencheman, John Smolte, Henry de Cophull, Laurence del Grome, Felix de Rycrofte, Henry Page, John le Baker, Adam de Torbok, Thomas de Torbok (could these be the ons of the Thomas who accompanied the King of Castile to Spain in 1385?) John Assheton, William le Smyth, John fil. Hugh, Richard de Werburton, Richard Webster, Margaret wife of Dakyn, nd Cecil le Gardener. (R. 23.)

In June, 1395, Sir John le Botiler, Knt., granted to Sir John de la Pulle, Knt., Peter Dutton, Peter de Legh, and Richard le Mascy de Rixton, the Tolls in the town of Warrington with all appurtenances, for which they were to render a grain of pepper yearly at Midsummer's Day for five years; and after this term was completed, a hundred pounds in silver, or forfeit the lease. (W. 37.) This grant may have had some connection with the recognizance for £200 into which the same four entered the 26th March, 1395, to Margaret, widow of Sir Laurence de Dutton, Knt., and Hugh, son of Edmund de Dutton. This Sir Laurence de Dutton had no children, his heir being his nephew Edmund de Dutton, whose mother was Elizabeth, sister of Sir John Boteler.

In 1395, the Rixton Mascys owned land in Cheshire; for on the 24th August, 19 Richard II., John del Wyche, chaplain, granted back to Richard le Mascy de Rixton, the manor of Rixton, w all premises and appurtenances there, and in Glasebrok, co. La caster; and also all the lands and tenements in Bowdon a Rostherne, co. Chester, which the said John had received of t feoffment of the said Richard. The witnesses to this deed bei

Sir John le Botiler, Knt., Sir John de la Pulle, Knt., Peter Dutt
Peter Legh, and John Leycester. (R. 85.) The date of t grant to John del Wyche being December, 1384. Probably t possessions in Bowdon and Rostherne had descended from t
Mascys of Tatton, who owned land in these two townships.

In January, 1396-7, Richard le Mascy de Rixton was one the sureties for Robert de Holden when the King leased to hi during the minority of the heir of Thomas de Boydell, the passa of the Bridge of Warrington, with the fishery called "Lachefor
"yorde." (Appendix ii, 36*th Report Dep. Keeper P.R.*, p. 237.)

Whoever might have been Richard Mascy's first wife, he appe to have married a second one named Matilda, living 1400, as names her in a deed of that date, of which the following is copy:—"Ego Ricardus Massie de Rixton dedi Petro filio m

(Dodsworth MSS. Bodl. Lib., vol. 41, fol. 91.)

In the 39th volume of the Dodsworth MSS., at folio 152, a very confused and erroneous pedigree of the Mascys of ixton, which makes Richard Mascy marry Matilda, who, 17 ichard II, was the widow of William de Horton; and rther represents Mascy's two sons, Hamon and Peter, to by her, giving them for wives her two daughters by William Horton—in other words, marries them to their uterine sters, which must be a mistake. Either Horton's daughters ere by a first wife, or Mascy's sons were by a former marriage: he latter is the most probable if Matilda was William de Horton's idow as late as 1394. (Dodsw. MSS. 39, fol. 152.)

Probably this Matilda was sister or aunt to John de Oulton ho died in October, 1397. On the 6th October, 1403: "Hamo filius Rici le Massy de Rixton et Matildis de Oulton, heredes Johis de Oulton nuper defuncti," of the diocese of Lichfield, ppoint proctors to act on their behalf in certain causes and ctions, (R. 89,) which doubtless was the lawsuit by which they ttempted to prove John de Oulton's marriage with Pelerine radock invalid, and her daughters illegitimate. (Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii., p. 190.) In case these daughters had been roved illegitimate, Matilda, as sister or aunt of John de Oulton, would have been heir to his property. (The question is, what connection had Hamon, son of Richard le Mascy de Rixton, with her affairs, unless she was some relation.)

Richard Mascy died between 1406 (W. 38) and 1407 (R. 91). His wife, Matilda, survived him, for we find on the 24th December, 1414, John and Robert, the sons of Sir Richard de Winnington, Knt., with others, bound over to keep the peace towards Matilda, widow of Richard le Mascy de Rixton. (Appendix ii, 37*th Report Dep. Keep. P. R.*, p. 801.)

Richard Mascy left two sons, namely Hamon (who succeeded to the family estates) and Peter. In a Mascy of Rixton pedigree, compiled by Mr. William Beamont, and now deposited in the Warrington Museum, Richard is stated to have had also two other sons, John, and Thomas the Rector of Warrington. Of John, it is stated that he was feoffee of his sister Johanna, a trustee, with Roger Holme and others, of the Troutbeck est 18th August, 22 Henry VI, 1444. From the Chester Rec zance Rolls we learn that this John Mascy, the trustee, w chaplain, to whom with Roger Holme, parson of Ast Church, and others, was granted premises in Parva-Cristel Ledesham, Wodechirche, and Chester, by William Troutbeck, early as 20th March, 1440-1. (Appendix ii, part 2, 37th Re Dep. Keep. P. R., p. 719.) And again, by a deed dated 2 September, 1444, John Mascy, chaplain, and others, w to act as trustees and to find, after the decease of Willi Troutbeck and Joan his wife, a fit and proper Chaplain to c brate divine service for the soul of the said William in Church of St. Mary-on-the-Hill, in Chester, in a chapel cal " La Trinite Chapell," built by William and Joan, and to pay the chaplain for so doing £5 : 6 : 8 yearly. (Ibid. 720.) P bably to this John was granted, 3rd February, 1448 the custody of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist outsi Chester (Ibid. 523); and whom, the 15th of June, 1472, Her Glazebrook and Peter Dutton were bound over not to mole (Ibid. 305.) A John Mascy was rector of Sefton Churc in October, 1489. (Ibid. 456.) I can nowhere discover th John Mascy the chaplain is called " brother " of Johanna Trou beck, neither have I come across his name amongst the Mas papers; but I see no reason why he should not have been a sc of Richard.

Thomas Mascy, the Rector of Warrington from 1448 to 146 was not the son, but the grandson of Richard Mascy, as I hop to prove hereafter.

Richard's son, Peter Mascy, married Margaret, one of th daughters and co-heirs of William de Horton, as mentioned i the deed quoted from the Dodsworth MSS. On the Thursday aft Easter, 7 Henry IV. (1406), Peter le Mascy enfeoffed Richar le More vicar of Bowdon Church, Cheshire, William le Spence chaplain, and John le Baker, of all the lands, tenements, rents, an services, &c., in Knodesford, co. Chester, which he had of th of Richard le Mascy his father. The charter is attested by chard le Mascy de Rixton (his father), Hamon le Mascy (his other), Hugh de Nedham, John Bowden, and Henry Deynall. e seal, of which only the lower portion remains, shows the ns on a shield to have been Quarterly, but no charge appears on her the third or fourth quarters, which are entire. (W. 38.)

Peter witnessed a deed of his brother Hamon in 1407; and 1409 was appointed attorney by Richard del More, vicar of owdon, and Richard le Westhend to deliver seizin to Hamon le ascy of premises in Rixton and Glazebrok, of which Hamon d previously enfeoffed them. (R. 92.)

In December, 1414, John and Robert Winnington were bound ver in a recognizance of £100 to keep the peace towards Peter e Mascy (Recog. Rolls of Chester), which was doubtless necessary, wing to the dispute as to common of pasture in Horton and Hartford, which some years later caused Sir Thomas Grosvenor nd Randle Mainwaring to act as arbitrators between the Mascys nd Winningtons. (Arley Deeds.) On the 16th July, 1414, Peter e Mascy, is called "of Horton," when acting as surety for Nicholas de Poulton, a fellow monk of Richard, Abbot of Dieulacre. (Append. ii, part 2, 37*th Report Dep. Keep. P. R.* p. 596.) He acted as arbitrator in August and September in the same year, between John de Kingsley de Nantwich and Sir William de Brereton, Knt. (Ibid. p. 430.) Probably this is the Peter de Mascy who, the 11th June, 1416, was appointed serjeant-at-law in the counties of Chester and Flint, with a salary of five marks yearly, during pleasure. (31*st and* 37*th Reports Dep. Keep. P. R.*) In January, 1417-18, he acted as arbitrator between Sir Thomas Grosvenor and Randle Mainwaring, and the same year was a surety with Robert de Mere and others for Roger de Venables, parson of Rousthestorn. In September, 6 Henry V, he was one of the Justices appointed to hold an Assize at Middlewich. (31*st Report Dep. Keeper P. R.* p. 249.)

In February, 1421-2, Peter le Mascy and John Dedewood obtain the custody of the lands, and marriage of Thomas, son and heir of Christopher de Hogh; the same Thomas de H having livery of his lands, 28th December, 1425 (Appendi part 2, 37*th Rep. Dep. Keep. P. R*, p. 516). This Thoma Hogh was of Leighton and Thornton, co. Chester, and mar Margery Davenport.

According to one of the Arley charters, Peter Mascy, or a is called in the deed, "Piers", with his wife Margaret, one the daughters and heirs of William de Horton, had some disp touching common of pasture in Horton and Hartford, with Richard Wynnington and his sons Robert and John; in wh dispute Sir Thomas Grosvenor, Knt., Randle Mainwaring, Ro del Mere, and others acted as arbitrators, 23rd December, 14 (Arley Charters, p. 20.)

The writ "Diem clausit extremum," on the death of Pet Mascy, is dated 24th April, 1430 (Appendix ii. part 2, 37*th Re Dep. Keep. P. R.* p. 518). It is possible he may have mar a second wife, Ellen, who took a second husband; for in Henry VI, Ellen, wife of John de Par, late wife of Pet Mascy, claimed dower, out of twelve messuages in Hertford Northwich, of Isabel, the daughter of the said Peter. (29*th Re Dep. Keeper P. R.*, p. 82.) According to the Par pedigrees, Ellen was the daughter and co-heiress of Richard Radcliff Backford. Of this daughter, Isabel Mascy, I can find no furt trace. Peter Mascy's daughter and heir, or co-heir, Mati married, 35 Henry VI, Sir Richard Aston of Aston, and issue. (Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. i. p. 723.)

Mr. Beamont, in the pedigree already-mentioned, gives Ric le Mascy of Rixton three daughters, namely, Katherine, the of William Chisnall, alive 5 Richard II; Sarah, wife of Jo Mascy of Grafton; and Johanna, wife of William Troutbec Of these alliances I can find no trace in the deeds of this da excepting that of Troutbeck. No marriage between the Masc of Rixton and those of Grafton appears in any of the publish pedigrees of the Mascys of Grafton, and the John Mascy wh about this date, 16 Henry VI, was "of Grafton," became so right of his wife Margaret, one of the daughters and co-heirs am de Grafton. (Ormerod's Cheshire, new edition, vol. ii. 94.)

Dugdale's Warwickshire, p. 739, I find that a William cy of Sirescote, co. Stafford, grandson to William Mascy of ley, co. Chester, had an only daughter and heir, Katherine, married, 39 Edward III, William de Chisenhall of Chisen-, co. Lancaster; perhaps it is this match which has been n as belonging to the Rixton Mascys.

he marriage of Johanna Mascy, in the Troutbeck pedigree Ormerod described as "de Rixton", with William Troutbeck, ire, must have taken place not later than 1412, as at the ng of her Inq. p. m., 31 Henry VI, 1453, her son and heir, n Troutbeck, was found to be aged 40 years and upwards merod's Cheshire, vol. ii. p. 39). In 1435 William Troutbeck d with others as trustee for the Mascys (W. 45), which points relationship. Possibly this Joan was the one described as of William Troutbeck, to whom, 9th March, 1439-40, an uity of £20 was granted during pleasure, in consideration of services rendered by her to the king's mother. (Appendix ii. 2, 37*th Report Dep. Keep. P. R.* p. 719.) The writ "diem sit extremum" on her death is dated the 9th December, 1452. id. p. 720.)

Hamon Mascy. 1407.

III.—Hamon, son and heir of Richard le Mascy de Rixton, ceeded his father in the Rixton estates, and the Thursday er St. Martin's in Winter, 9 Hen. IV, received from the Trustees, hn del Wyche, chaplain, Richard le Boseley, John Hale, and lowe le French, all the lands, tenements, &c., in Rixton and asebrook, which they had received of the feoffment of Richard Mascy de Rixton, by his charter dated December, 1384. The tnesses to this surrender are Peter le Mascy, John le Baker, and illiam le Spencer, chaplain. (R. 91.) By a deed, dated 11th ugust, 1419, it appears that Hamon le Mascy de Rixton had exe-ution on all the messuages, lands, &c., belonging to Robert le Mascy de Hale in Ordwyck and Hale, co. Chester, by force of a recognizance made by Robert for £100. In consider however, of Robert paying annually to Hamon, at Bc Church, twenty shillings in silver during the lifetime of Pel wife of the same Robert, Hamon demises the premises to R for life. (W. 40.) This Peleryne was the widow of Joh Oulton, whose marriage was disputed, as already mentione 1403, by this same Hamon Mascy and Matilda de Oulton. (the debt be in any way connected with this suit?

In 1426, Hamon added to his possessions in Rixton by chasing land and premises of Richard le Smyth. (R. 96 and He married, before 1400, Ellen, daughter and co-heir of Wi de Horton. On the 23rd December, 1427, he and his wife were parties to a dispute with the Wynningtons as to the com of pasture in Horton and Hertford; Ellen his wife, with her s Margaret, the wife of Peter Mascy, being described as daug and co-heirs of William de Horton. (Arley Charters, page The Mascys of succeeding generations have always quar Argent, a squirrel sejant, Gules, as the arms of de H which leads one to conclude she was the mother of Ha children.

Hamon was one of the executors to the will of Richard t burton, Sheriff of Cheshire 1424 to 1428 (W. 44), and o 12th August, 13 Henry VI, we find that Hamo le Masch Rixton, with William le Mascy de Rixton, Richard le Masc Rixton, and John Holcroft, became sureties for Cecilia, widc Sir Ralph de Radcliffe, Knt. (who died in March, 11 Henry the same Cecilia being indicted for felony. (33rd Report Keeper R. O., page 35.) Was this Cecilia related to the Rix Mascys, as three of them became answerable for her appearar She was the widow of William de Venables, Baron of Kinder and Sir Ralph de Radcliffe paid a fine of 50 marks for marr her without license.

Hamon Mascy had, besides his eldest son and successor liam, four other sons and four daughters.

Richard Mascy, the second son, was granted by his fath 10th January, 14 Henry VI (1436), for life, a mediety of his o

Cheshire, which grant Richard's brother William Mascy con-med, 20th January, 1436. (R. 101.) This Richard acted as stee for his nephew Hamon Mascy in 1453 (R. 95 and R. 103), d with his brother Thomas, the parson of Warrington, and hers in 1454. (W. 52.) He apparently married Alice, widow Sir Ralph Langton, Knt. By the Duchy of Lancaster Calendar Chancery Rolls it is shown that James de Langton, parson of igan, and Henry de Kighley were bound in a recognizance Alice, widow of Sir Ralph de Langton, Knt., to assign her asonable dower from her late husband's lands; but the recogzance was cancelled the 10th September, 10 Henry VI, by rder, Richard le Mascy, the husband of the aforesaid Alice, ppearing personally before William Troutbeck, Chancellor of the unty Palatine. The same day, Hamon le Mascy of Rixton ther of Richard the husband), Richard Sherburne (who married oan, daughter of Sir Ralph Langton of Newton), and Nicholas otiler of Raweclyf, bound themselves for the payment of Alice's ower. (33rd Report Dep. Keeper R. O., page 40.) I conclude he was the widow of Sir Ralph Langton of Newton, who died Henry VI; though Baines gives him to wife Johanna, the aughter and co-heir of William Bolderston. (Baines' Hist. lanc., vol. iii, p. 642.) She died in 1439, the writ, "diem clausit extremum," after her death, being dated 16th August, Henry VI. This Richard had a son, William, living 5th Iarch, 1437-8, when he was commissioned, with William Mascy uc Rixton and others, to arrest William Venables late of Ridley.
fte 7th Report Dep. Keep. P. R., part 2, app. ii, page 762.) In 452 we find this Richard, when acting as trustee for his nephew, amon Mascy of Rixton, sealing with a squirrel sejant, the scription round his seal being "RIC: MASSY." (R. 95.)

To John Mascy, son of Hamon, his father, on 10th January,
Henry VI, granted 2 messuages, 2 barns, 48 acres of land,
2 acres of pasture, with appurtenances (in the tenure ugh Wylme and John Wylkynson) in Rixton, for life; the sses to the deed being John de Leycester, William del
he, and Ralph de Swettenham. (R. 100.)

George Mascy, another son of Hamon, was, on 9th of Ja 14 Henry VI, granted by his father a mediety of his lar Cheshire for life; which grant George's brother, William M confirmed the 19th January in the same year. (W. 46. August, 1435, we find this George Mascy taking part wi brother William in the family feud with the Carringtons, an recognizance of that date he is described as "yeoman." G acted as trustee for his nephew Hamon Mascy, 32 Hen and also 17 Edward IV. (W. 52 and W. 63.) He is stat have married Katherine, daughter and heir of Oliver Bar Barton, co. Chester, and left a daughter and heir Petronilla became the wife of Edmund Lathum, and was the moth George Lathum of Irlam. (St. George's Visitation of Lanca 1613.)

The other son of Hamon and Ellen Mascy was Thomas. is described, in the various deeds to which he was either a p or a witness, as "clerk," "rector," or "parson of Warrin "Church," and also, which proves his identity most clearly brother to the Richard Mascy who is designated "for "Hamon."

In November, 31 Henry VI (1452), Thomas Mascy, of Warrington Church, with his brother, "Ricardus p "Hamonis Mascy," and other trustees, released to Hamon de Rixton, the then owner of Rixton, all the manors and la the counties of Lancaster and Chester, which they held b grant of William Mascy de Rixton (Hamon's father). (R And the 24th May following, 31 Henry VI (1453), Tho with others, was enfeoffed by his nephew, the same Hamon, all his lands, &c., in the before-named counties. (R. 103.) also acted as trustee in 1454. (W. 52.) The seal with h this Thomas Mascy sealed, displays a pelican in its piety, circ scribed "THOMAS MASCY." (R. 95.) On 27th Septemb 1461, he and his brother Richard, and two of the other trust surrender, at the request of their nephew, Hamon Masy, Master John Bothe, clerk, Sir William Bothe, Knt., and an Hall, clerk, the manors and lands in Rixton which they had ho his grant in 31 Henry VI. (R. 108.) Thomas Mascy was ctor of Warrington in 1452, and died before 4th July, 1464. 95, and Beamont's Warrington Church Notes.)

as to Hamon Mascy's daughters, Sir Peter Leycester states he his ancestor, John Leycester, married, 10 Henry V (1422), Sibeth, a daughter of Hamon Mascy of Rixton. John Ley- C· acted as witness to several deeds about this date for the igays, and took part with them in their quarrel with the eingtons in 1434. In December, 1432, Hamo le Mascy of asen, John de Legh del Rigges, William son of Hamo le zscy, and Randal de Swetenham, are bound in a recognizance d£46 13s. 4d. to John de Leycester, Robert de Leycester de ɒɒeurley, Randal de Mainwaring, and two others. (Chester cog. Rolls.) This may have had some connection with Eliza- th Leycester's marriage portion.

Margaret, another daughter of Hamon, married, about 1431, omas, second son of Sir Thomas Hesketh of Rufford, Knt. omas Hesketh died the 8th October, 1463, when it was found t his son and heir, Robert, was then aged thirty-one years. layfair's Baronetage, and Croston's Lancashire County Families.)

According to the "Hyde of Norbury" pedigree, John Hyde, a. died 1460, married, for his first wife, Matilda, daughter of enon Mascy of Rixton. (Ormerod's Hist. of Cheshire, vol. iii, 7 10.) We find John Hyde siding with the Mascys in 1434 1435 against the Carringtons.

As to Hamon's other daughter, Douce, there is no doubt; for marriage contract is preserved, dated Wednesday next fore the Ascension, 8 Henry VI (1430). By this indenture it agreed "bytwene Hamonet Massy of Rixton of the one parte, and Harre, son and heire to Nicholas of Athirton, on tother parte: . . . that Harre shall wed Douce, doghter of the said Hamonet, bytwene the date of this indenture and missomer next suying." In consideration of which marriage, Hamon ndertakes to pay Harry Athirton 100 marks, namely, forty marks e day of the espousals, ten at Martinmas next ensuing after the ate of these presents, ten at Midsummer following, and so on, each Martinmas and Midsummer ten marks, until the one dred are fully paid. Harry on his part undertakes that if dies within six years after the espousals without issue, he repay to Hamon sixty marks within two years of Douce's d (R. 105.)

Hamon Mascy died 1436, the writ "diem clausit extrem being dated 9th July, 14 Henry VI. (33rd Report Dep. Ke P. R., p. 37.) Unfortunately the Inquisition is nowhere found in the Record Office, though every search has been for it.

William Mascy. 1436.

IV. William, the eldest son and heir of Hamon Mas
Rixton, confirmed, as already mentioned, the grants w
Hamon made to his younger sons Richard and Georg
January, 1436. He married, before his father's death, Petropa daughter and heir of Richard de Werberton of Burgh. g dispensation for the marriage is dated from Constance (where,
Pope awaited the verdict to be pronounced on his two ri Gregory and Benedict), 5th day of January, 5th year of John XXIII; and at Lichfield, 10th August, 1415, wherein contracting parties are described as "William son of Ha
"le Massey, layman, and Petronilla daughter of Richard
"Werburton, spinster," they being related within the fo degree of consanguinity. (Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. i, p. quoting the Lichfield Diocesan Registers.)

Richard Werburton, the father of this Petronilla, was Sheriff of Cheshire from 1424 until his death at the end of 1
By this marriage the Mascys acquired lands and tenemen Altryncham, Thelwall, Hale, Cogeshill, Over and Nether Whi and Comberbach, co. Chester, also lands in Penyngton, co.
caster. (R. 141 and R. 151.)

The only deeds relating to these estates preserved among Mascy charters (in connexion with the Warburtons) are, a Let of attorney, dated Monday before Christmas, 7 Henry V, fro
Richard de Werburton and Elizabeth his wife to deliver seisin

s, &c., in Altryncham and Hale, to William le Couper and am le Spencer, chaplain, whom they have enfeoffed of the (W. 41); and the Confirmation of a grant from Ralph de ey to Richard de Werburton of land and premises in Cog-ull, Over and Nether Whitley, and Comberbach, with the sion of those messuages, &c., which Hamon and Robert de ynngton held for the life of Hamon de Wynyngton, as well as eversion of those premises which Henry de Workesley and garet his wife, formerly wife of Laurence de Burghs, fil. John urghs, held in the same towns, in the name of dower, Ralph ey having the reversion from Richard, son of Randle de ngton. The witnesses to the deed are Sir Thomas le denor and Sir Edward Den, Knts., Ralph Maynwaring, ert de Davenport, and Robert de Hyde. It is dated at hs, Tuesday in the octave of Pentecost, 9 Henry V. (W. 43.)

The will of Richard Werburton, Petronilla Mascy's father, is d 27th December, 1427; in it he names his brother William ourton. He appoints his wife Elizabeth, with Hamon and lliam Massy, his executors. He leaves to the parish priest of dworth £10, for two years, for the good of his soul; but gives direction as to where he was to be buried. The will contains ny small legacies of beasts, measures of corn, and clothes,— , "una toga virido enbrauderdi," &c. Administration of the l was granted in June, 1428. (W. 46.)

In April, 1429, William le Mascy, described "of Burghes," s, with Geoffrey Starky, Ector de Ince, and others, appointed collect the debts due to Richard de Werburton, deceased, as eriff of Chester; and on 19th January, 1429-30, Hamon Mascy h others was bound in a recognizance of 200 marks that lizabeth who was the wife of Richard de Werburton of Burwes leceased, and William Mascy of Burwes," will abide an award be made by William Troutbeck, Esq., touching disputes between e same Elizabeth and William with Richard de Werburton and hn son of Hugh de Legh of Legh. (Chesh. Recog. Roll.)

To return to William Mascy and his Rixton possessions, we nd that a charter was enrolled at Chester, dated 26th July, 1429,

by which William, son of Hamon Mascy, granted to Wil Troutbeck, Esq., Robert del Mere, Richard Bolde of Che John Harwardyne, and William Hulme, chaplain, the fee moiety of the manor of Horton, and all his lands, &c., in H ford and Horton, (*Chesh. Recog. Rolls, 37th Report Dep. K.
P. R.*, p. 517,) and the same trustees surrendered the lan
William Mascy, the 21st March, 13 Henry VI. (W. 45.)

An indenture made the 5th February, 1438, between Sir Ro Bothe, Knt., of the one part, and William Mascy of Rixton, E of the other, recites that William Mascy with "Harre de Athert
"John Holcroft, and Richard del Bruche are bound to Sir Rol

Mascy performing his part of the covenant contained in cer indentures made between him and Sir Robert touching the r riage of Hamon, son and heir of William, with Janet, dau of Sir Robert, the statute merchant shall be void. This inden for defeasance is sealed with the seal which the Mascys several successive generations used, namely, within an octa two covered cups crossed saltirewise, and above them the Massy. (W. 47.)

By a fine for settlement and entail, dated at Chester, Tu
after St. Lawrence, 16 Henry VI, John de Gunclif, cha his wife deforciants, of 27 messuages, 1 mill, 104 acres of his heirs male; in default, on Hugh de Mascy, Edward's broth and his heirs male; with remainder to the right heirs of Ham de Mascy. (W. 48.)

By the Patent Roll, 20 Henry VI (No. 6), amongst the Duc of Lancaster records, we find that William le Mascy of Rixto Esq., was granted the custody of the lands of Elizabeth, late wi

r William Botiler, Knt., during the minority of John Botiler, grandson and heir of Sir William and Elizabeth Botiler—h Report Dep. Keep. P. R., p. 536)—which lands had been pted from the grant made by the King to Sir Peter de Dutton others, of the Botiler estates during John's nonage. (Lords Warrington, 255.) This Mascy acted as trustee for Sir John ler in 1444—(ibid. p. 263)—and in the same capacity for Sir frey Warburton of Arley in June, 1447. In a deed relating his last trust, dated 18th December, 33 Henry VI (1455), iam Mascy is described as "deceased"—(Arley deeds)—gh I think his death occurred in 1447-8, for in a Botiler deed uly, 26 Henry VI (1448), we find his son Hamon acting as ee in his place, and he was certainly dead in 1451, as Hamon then the owner of Rixton. Of William's three sons named he fine of entail, Hamon succeeded him.

dward Mascy, the second son, I suggest was the Edward le cy of Altryncham, (Petronilla Werburton his mother owned in this town,) who, with William le Mascy of Rixton and rs, undertake that John Mascy of Hale keeps the peace, 1434; who, (with Hamo, George, and William le Mascy of Rixton,) bound in a recognizance, 11th August, 1435, to abide an d in a dispute pending between them and Sir John Caryngton. ard Mascy is also named in a commission with several of the ton Mascys, in May, 1436, to arrest William le Venables and rs; and again in March, 1437-8. (App. II. part 2, 37th Re- Dep. Keep. P. R.) An Edward Mascy is named in 1442 as ding land in Partington of William Bothe of Dunham Mascy. esh. Recog. Rolls.)

ugh le Mascy, another son of William named in the fine of ement, does not appear again in any of the Mascy charters, nave I discovered anything about him elsewhere.

William Mascy had a daughter named Ellen, about whom ous discords arose between her family and the Caryngtons of yngton. On 18th March, 1434-5, Sir John Caryngton and son Thomas were bound in a recognizance of 500 marks to king, that they will abide the award of Sir John de Stanley,

Knt., William Troutbeck, Esq., and William Chauntrell, to

Unfortunately, I can find no record of the origin of the d nor of its ending. Perhaps Thomas Caryngton set the ex to William Pulle and forcibly carried off Ellen Mascy.
inclined to suppose that the quarrel ended amicably, and s that Thomas married Ellen Mascy, for in 1454 we find him a as a witness to a Mascy deed, which rather points to a re ship. (W. 51.) Numerous recognizances were entered ir various members of well-known Cheshire and Lancashire fa

Hamon le Mascy. 1448.

V. Hamon, son and heir of William Mascy, married in Janet or Johanne, daughter of Sir Robert Bothe of Du Massey, Knt., the marriage contract, already quoted, being 5th February, 1438. (W. 47.)

On 20th May, 1451, William, Bishop of Coventry and field, gave license to his dear son in Christ, Hamon le M Esquire, and Johanne his wife, for Mass and Divine office celebrated in their Chapel Oratory within their manor of Ri same being situated in the said diocese. (R. 102.) This ves that at this date Hamon had succeeded his father in the ily estates.

The 4th November, 31 Henry VI (1452), Richard, son of mon Mascy, John Leycester, John Holcroft, and Thomas scy, parson of Warrington Church, released to Hamon Mascy Rixton and his heirs, all the manors, messuages, &c., in the unties of Lancaster and Chester, which they held of the feoffent of William Mascy of Rixton ; Richard and Thomas Mascy ing uncles to young Hamon. (R. 95.)

Hamon forthwith proceeded to re-settle his estates on 22nd May, Henry VI (1453), granting to Nicholas Birom, Robert Legh Adlington, senior, James Skarisbrek, William Bothe, son of Robert Bothe, Knt., John Chauntrell, Master John Bothe, offrey Bothe, and Hamon Bothe, his manors and messuages, ds, &c., in the town of Hertford, co. Chester, also the manor Horton in the same county : Witnesses to the deed being hn Harford and Geoffrey Mascy, Knts. ; Thomas Sutton, John ne, John Dokenfeld, Thomas Caryngton, Thomas Duncalf, Worth and Aluered Radcliff. The deed is sealed with the sed cups. (W. 51.) Two days afterwards Hamon granted his ar cashire manors and lands to Sir Robert Bothe, Knt. ; Thomas scy, Parson of Warrington ; William Bothe, son of Sir Robert ; xt hard Mascy, brother of the said Thomas ; John Holcroft, ster John Bothe, John Urmeston, Vicar of Bowdon ; and a nes Hall, Vicar of Legh : the witnesses being Sir John Botiler, John Honford, Sir Geoffrey Massy, Knts. ; Thomas Sutton, n Troutbec, Robert Legh of Adlington, Peter Werberton, ter Legh, and Thomas Bothe of Barton, Esqrs. (R. 103.)

In August, 1453, Richard Norman, prior of the monastery of kenhead, of the order of St. Benedict, on behalf of the ligious of the house, granted to Thomas Massy, Rector of the urch of Warrington, Hamon Massy of Rixton, Richard Massy Rixton, and George Massy of Rixton, a Lease of the lands tenements, rents and services, with tithe of sheaf, which the vent held in the parish of Bowdon, also all that appertains to mon had by his wife Johanna, Hamon, who succeeded to property, William, and John. Also five daughters, viz., n, Maude and Janet (or Joan), all unmarried in 1464, ery and Pernel.

William Mascy, the second son, is named as executor t father's will in 1462, though he must have been very y the time. He was under the age of sixteen in January, 14 as it was then agreed that his mother was to have charge of

William Mascy became a priest, and as such, in 149 brother Hamon settled upon him an annuity of £10 a y (R. 141). From his being mentioned before his brother John the settlement of the family disputes in 1465, and also bei named executor to his father's will, it is probable that he was t second son, although John, his brother, succeeded to the Rixt manors, &c., which William, being a priest, would not d have been unable to discover the date of his death or where officiated. Of John Mascy, the third son, who became "
Rixton," we must treat more fully hereafter.

In January, 4 Edward IV, three of the daughters of Ham and Johanna Mascy are named as unmarried, namely Aliso Maude, and Janet; for whom it was agreed that their moth

l have certain rents, " to mari and fynde competently unto tyme as they be mariet." (R. 116.) Of these three, the ne I can trace is Janet or Joan, who married John Dom- enior of Lymme, who was living 13th March, 1460. The ille pedigree in Ormerod's Cheshire does not record the ian name of Joan Mascy's father, but from the fact that we ohn Domville a witness to Mascy deeds in 1476 and 1487 o and R. 134), and that Hamon Mascy had a daughter d Joan or Janet, we may safely suppose John Domville's o have been this daughter.

n, son of Gilbert Culcheth, is stated to have married Pernel, ss ter of Hamon Mascy, in 1462, and he dying in 1476, she d Robert Kirkham (Mr. Rylands' Pedigree of Culcheth). Beamont states that her second husband was Robert Rixton. n Culcheth was a witness to a Mascy deed 14th November, Edward IV. (R. 127.)

Margery, the wife of Henry, son and heir apparent of Richard ey of Risley, in a deed of 3 Edward IV, is described as ghter of Hamon Mascy of Rixton.

ohanna Mascy, Hamon's widow, outlived her husband some s; and the rental of the various farms and lands assigned to for dower on 1st November, 1462, amounted to £11 13*s.* 5*d.* Rixton, with eighteen shillings and eleven pence from the ele de Thorlemore " with land in Altrincham, making a total £12 12*s.* 4*d.*, and averages amounting to £1 3*s.* 3*d.* (R. 86); ch premises John Bothe and the other trustees demised to the same day for her life. The witnesses to the deed being n Chauntrell, Robert Leycester, John Holcroft, John Fyton Pennall, and George Mascy. (R. 111.)

Whether Hamon Mascy the son and heir was not satisfied with allotments made by the trustees to his mother, or whether on ount of his marriage it was necessary to have his rights firmly ined, on the 6th January, 4 Edward IV, Sir William Bothe, t., John Chauntrell, Esq., and Hugh Gartside, made an Award, which, (after reciting that there had been " varience discords nd debate " between Johanna late wife of Hamond Mascy

sometime of Rixton, "squire," and William and John t
the said Hamond, with Hamond Mascy son and heir of t

An annuity of thirteen shillings and fourpence a year, granted to Thomas Duncalf by the feoffees of Hamond the father, is to be paid in equal portions by Hamond the son, and by Johanna. Johanna was also to enjoy "all fermes and every parcell of lands" which Hamond the father died seized of in the parish of Bowdon. (R. 116.) Under this award Johanna appears to have done well, so she could afford, on account of "love and affection," in August, 6 Edward IV (1467), to assign to her son Hamond the lease which the Prior of Birkenhead had, in 1452, granted to her husband of the farmes and tithes in Bowdon, &c., which he, by his will, had left to her. The seal on this instrument bears, within a circle, a stumpy covered cup, between letters "J." and "M." (W. 59.)

We do not know if she can have lived until 1497, but a fragment of paper is preserved, dated at Halton, 22nd October, 12 Henry VII, which runs—"As touchyng a relef demanded of Hamlet Mascy of Rixton for the land in Coggeshull, he saith that his father caused a feoffment to be made thereof to his wife for terme of her life. And he will prove by suffycyent record or the King's councell . . . . . at Waryngton." (W. 77.)

Hamon le Mascy. 1462.

VI. Hamon, the son and heir of Hamon Mascy of Rixton, Esquire, succeeded his father in 1462, and was, as decided by the award made 6th January, 4 Edward IV, to enjoy peaceably all the Mascy manors and lands in Lancashire and Cheshire, except those adjudged for the use of his mother and brothers for the term of their lives.

Hamon married, about 1464, Alice, the daughter of Sir John Butler of Bewsey, Knt. On 27th February, 3 Edward IV

(1463-4), Master John Bothe, clerk, Sir William Bothe, Knt., James Hall, rector of Northerden (Hamon Mascy's fe granted to Alice, daughter of Sir John Botiler, Knt., the suages and lands, with appurtenances in the several tenu Hugh Knolles, Roger Yate, George Clare, Thomas Bold, Clare, Richard Hall, John Wright, and Roger Yate, junior, towns of Thelwall, co. Chester, and in Rixton, co. Lanc with certain parcels of land and meadow, wood, &c., in Ri called "Nerewood in Swallesleigh," "The 10 acre in Swallesl "The Stramard," "The Brenderethe," "The Rede m "The three Parrokkes," and "West Croft," containing 15½ and two closes called "North fields," containing 4½ acres. (T named crofts or fields formed part of the demesne lands atta to the capital messuage of Rixton Hall.) All which messu and lands Master John Bothe and the others had, inter alia the feoffment of Hamon Mascy late of Rixton, Esq., deceased, which were valued, over all averages and reprisals, at £14. per annum: To have and to hold to the said Alice for life, then to Hamon, the son of the aforesaid Hamon, and his h for ever: Witnesses, John Holcroft, Richard Bryche, and Ricl and George Mascy. (R. 114.) This grant was evidently m just before Hamon's marriage; a further confirmation of this position being, that in the award of January, 1464-5, it was se that Johanna Mascy was to have any money that was owing the marriage of Hamon her son. The deed also proves that t Christian name of the Botiler lady who married Hamon Ma of Rixton was Alice, and not Elizabeth, as is stated in the nc to Lancashire Chantries and elsewhere. Hamon's wife is a named as "Alice" in a deed of settlement made October 6 1497, and in the license for Hollynfare chapel in 1498.

In the Annals of the Lords of Warrington it is stated that S John Botiler, who was born in 1402, married in 1411 Isabe Harrington, and died in 1430, left three daughters, Elizabet Alice, and Ellen, also a son John, born after his sisters, March 1429. This last John married, in 1444, Margaret Gerard, an

by her two sons and four daughters, Margaret, Jane, Isabella, Elizabeth. It is also stated that Elizabeth, the daughter of first Sir John, and also Elizabeth, the daughter of the second John Botiler, married a Hamon Mascy of Rixton, which is ibtless erroneous, for it is proved by the Mascy deeds that ce was the name of young Hamon Mascy's wife, and the elder mon died in 1463, leaving a widow named Johanna. The stion therefore is, to which generation did the Alice Botiler ong? If she was the daughter of Sir John Botiler and Isa-la Harrington she could not, in 1464, have been aged less than ty-six years, (for her brother John, born after her, did not ne into the world till 1429,) and this would be an age rather anced for marriage in those days of juvenile betrothals. If, ftever, she was the daughter of the second Sir John, who in n t , being then eleven years of age, married Margaret Gerard, Ed night have been born about 1449, and so have been of a Mar ble age for intermarriage with the young squire of Rixton ley 64.

The lease held of the Priory of Birkenhead, which Hamon's ther had in 1467 assigned to him, he appears to have sur-ndered; for on the Saturday after the Assumption of the Blessed gin, 7 Edward IV (1468), Thomas Raynford, the then Prior of el enhead, grants to Hamon Mascy de Rixton, Oliver Smult, k, Henry Lervet, and Nicholas Page, the lands, rents, tenements, icl and tithe of sheaf belonging to the Priory, in the parish of r f don, and in Partington, Dunham, Caryngton, Tymperley, hi ryngham, Astheley, and Hale, the medieties of the towns of lyngton, Acton, and Astheton, and two parts of Bagulegh, to held for thirty-nine years of the Priory, at a yearly rent of e 40, to be paid to the monastery, and sixteen shillings of silver ery midsummer to the Rector of Wylmeslow church. During he tenancy Hamon was bound, as before, to repair and maintain t his own cost the chancel of Bowdon church and the tithe-barn f Hale. The seal attached to this lease is the same as on the ease of 32 Henry VI, from Prior Richard Norman, but, though more damaged, it shows a portion of a canopy over the f

James Hall, the Rector of Northenden, probably on accoun advancing age, on the 12th April, 1480, relinquished the Ma trust, granting to Sir Geoffrey Mascy, Knt., John Byrom, Geo Bothe, Esquires, Ralph Penketh, and William Wigan, chapla all the lands, manors, &c., which he and others with him we counties of Lancaster and Chester. The deed is witnessed b

Sir John Trafford, Sir William Haryngton, Knts., Peter Werburt
Richard Rymington, and John Leycester, Esquires. (R. 130.)

On the 8th December, 1 Henry VII, Hamon Mascy of Rixto was granted by Ralph Nevill, Earl of Westmoreland, an ann rent of ten marks for life out of the lordship of Assheforth in th Peke, co. Derby. (W. 96.) Nothing in the grant explains w this rent-charge was given; perhaps it was for some serv

dered by Hamon to Ralph before the latter succeeded his le in 1485 ; but Ralph Nevill having married Margaret, the ghter of Sir Roger Bothe of Barton, was, through this union, nected with the Mascys.

By an Indenture of 12th March, 1487, reciting a deed made days before, by which his brother Hamond had given him life certain lands and tenements in Rixton, John Mascy ees that his brother Hamon shall have all yearly averages and vices of the tenants, with all the "mouraden dwellyng in and on the said messuages and lands" during John's life, so long ohn receives the rents due out of the farms. (R. 132.)

In 1488 Hamon had a dispute with Piers Worthington as to title of some lands and tenements in Glasebrok, which dispute decided 21st September, 4 Henry VII, by an arbitrator, Orell, who declared that Worthington was, on receipt within rtain time of £3 10*s*., to deliver to Hamon Mascy "a fficient and lawful releshe" of all the messuages, &c., in ebroke under dispute (R. 135 and W. 71); which release given 27th September, 1488. (R. 136.)

On the 6th October, 1497 (12 Henry VII), Hamon made an tlenture of settlement, which recites that he had, the 1st October, Henry VII, enfeoffed Sir John Bothe of Barton, Knt., William othe of Dunham Massey, Thomas Davenport of Henbury, ohn Assheley, Thomas Hyde of Norbury, Esqs., William Tatton, ilbert Domeville, Henry Risley, Hamond Bruche, William ynshull, Vicar of Bowdon Church, Thomas Legh of High Legh, d Roger Chapman, Parson of half the church of Lyme, of all s manors and lands, &c., in the counties of Lancaster and Chester, r certain uses, and then explains these uses. at his lands and tenements, &c., in Bowdon and Yarwode were ailed upon his ancestors and their heirs general, and that his nds, &c., in Altrincham, Thelwall, Hale, Cogesill, Over and ether Whitley, and Comberbach were given to William Mascy Rixton and to Pernel his wife for the term of their lives, mainder to Hamon Mascy, son and heir of the same William nd Pernel and his male heirs, "whose heire male I the said Hamonde son of Hamonde am," with remainder to Hugh nother son of William and Pernel and his heirs male, with emainder to Edward, another son of William and Pernel and is heirs male. But as it is considered by himself, his kinsmen nd friends, that the lands in Bowdon and Yarwood, which are ailed on the heirs general, would be more convenient for the eirs male who have the manor of Rixton, and that the lands in helwall, Coggeshull, Over and Nether Whitley and Comberbach ie more conveniently for the heirs general, Hamonde settles the ands in Bowdon, Hale, Altrincham, and Yarwood on himself nd his male heirs, remainder to his brother John and his male eirs, while the land in Coggeshull, Over and Nether Whitley, Thelwall and Comberbach are settled on himself and his right eirs general, "which as yet be my doghters." Further, as from his evidences he finds that his lands, &c., in Penyngton, co. Lancaster, were given to Richard Werburton and Elizabeth his wife for their lives, with remainder to Pernell their daughter and her heirs general, and the lands in Horton and Hertford, co. Chester, were tailed on his "ancestors and their heirs general of old time, and no disturbance made to the contrary," he decides hat they shall so decend to his heirs general. The land he urchased in Glasebroke, and the tenements he bought in Warrington and Pulton are to pass after his death, without male issue, to his brother John and his male heirs, provided that neither John nor his heirs disturb the settlements and rents of the premises set aside for the payment of the chaplain of Hollynfere Green Chapel. Hamon further provides that his feoffees are to grant by deed on his death "to my brother William "Mascy prest," an annual rent of £10 to be paid half-yearly, the first payment to commence at Midsummer or Martinmas, w ever feast should first occur after his death. (R. 141 and This deed of settlement must be, I think, the one quote

"Lancashire Chantries," from Sir Peter Leycester's "Liber
where it is erroneously called a Will. It would seem unnece to make a Will securing an endowment to Hollynfer C between those of Ralph Ryxton and those of the heir Pasmyth, bought 4th April, 1483 (W. 65); and a messuage garden, bought a few days afterwards, let to Richard Ryder, between a burgage house belonging to Thomas Botiler, l on one side, and a messuage of Richard Bryche's on the c (W. 66); in November, 2 Richard III, a parcel of land in Ho let to Edward More and Richard Ryder, which lies between lands of Hugh Bryche and "Downehouse meadow" on side, and the parish church lands on the other (W. 68); in 1 a tenement and close called "Dadfield," let to John Mattl and lying between Richard Wenington's land, also a headl abutting on Warrington Heath on the one side, and the ki highway on the other (W. 72); in June, 6 Henry VII, Har purchased another messuage and garden in Warrington, ly between the lands of Sir Thomas Botiler on the west, and la of Hugh Bruche on the east, also a headland abutting on

"Kyrkstret," and one adjoining the lands of William Arrowsm
(W. 73); and in June, 12 Henry VII, a parcel of land situa between that of Sir Thomas Botiler and the "Heght feyldc near Dadfeld Cross. (W. 76.) The whole of these premi being bought from Henry Gernet of Warrington.

In Glasebrook, Hamon purchased from Richard, the son, a Agnes, the widow of William Robynson, all their premises in t town in 1474. (R. 124 and R. 126.)

By deed dated 4th November, 16 Edward IV, Thomas Co berbach conveyed to Hamon Mascy all his part of the messua and lands which he lately had of the feoffment of Richard Mc

Cecilia his wife, in Glasebroke. John Culcheth, Humphrey y, and others, are witnesses to the deed. (R. 127.)

January, 1483, John, son of Thomas Comberbach deceased, all his premises in Glasebroke to Hamon Mascy. The esses are Hugh Breche, Edmund Lathom, Richard Mascy, Shawe, and George Mottehewe (? Matthew). (R. 131.)

---

he Richard More who, with Cecilia his wife, granted these lands to Thomas Comberbache, was of Asheley, co. Chester; the messuages in question descended to Cecilia More on the h of Margaret, wife of Adam Lyke. Thomas Comberbache escribed as son of Robert Comberbache of Bolynton. (R. .)

n June, 1480, a messuage, which John Shawe held at will, in sebroke, was granted to Hamon by John Sutton of Macclesd, co. Chester, gent. (R. 129); and in July, 1492, the same ton sells the premises in Fernehead, within the parish of rrington, which Hugh Breche holds of him for a term of rs. (W. 74.) The sum paid for these two last farms appears have been £45 6*s.* 8*d.* (R. 139), Alice, the widow of John tton, in February, 1496, giving Mascy a full acquittance for same. In January, 1492, Hamon again became the purchaser a messuage and land in Glasebroke, one John Hatton, late of ventry, draper, being the vendor. (R. 137 and 138.)

Whether or not Hollinsfer Chapel was completed when Hamon ascy made the settlement in October, 1497, for its endowent I cannot tell; but on 4th September, 1498, Dr. John eysy gave license, dated at Manchester, to his beloved in rist, Hamlet Mascy, Esq., and Alice his wife, for mass and vine office to be celebrated in their chapel of Holynfer, within e parish of Warrington in the diocese of Lichfield and Coventry. 151 B.) According to Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. i, p. 115, ew Ed., John Veysy was not admitted to the archdeaconry of hester until 27th August, 1499.

In 1500, arrangements were entered into for the marria John Mascy, the younger brother of Hamon. It was by in ture dated 20th March, 15 Henry VII, agreed between H Mascy of Rixton, Esq., and Sir John Bothe of Barton, that "John Mascy, brother unto the said Hamon, shal be
"by the grace of God lawfully to take to wyfe and wedde
"doughter unto the seid Sir John Bothe, afore the fest of

Hamon will within twenty days after the wedding make, to c trustees, an estate in lands of the yearly value of 12 marks,

Hamon has no male issue, then to John Mascy's heirs male.
is further agreed that if Hamon has any legitimate sons he 20 marks. The witnesses to this indenture are Sir Tho

Assheton, Sir John Werburton, Knts., Richard Radcliff of Rad Robert Werkesley of the Bothe, and Robert Langley. (R. 1.

Hamon Mascy died about 1502: whether Alice his wife vived him or not I have been unable to discover. Hamon no sons, but two daughters and co-heirs; namely, Marga married to John Holcroft, to whom she is stated by Orme and Baines to have conveyed the manors of Horton and H ford; and Alice, who married Robert Werkesley or Worsley Bothe, co. Lancaster. (Flower's Visit. of Lanc., 1567.) marriage probably took place before 1500, as Robert Werke was one of the witnesses to the agreement on John Ma

arriage, just cited. This Alice probably had for her portion land n Pennington, Horton, Hertford, and Bowden; for we find Robert Vorsley (her son) suffering a recovery of premises in these towns n 1547. (Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. ii, p. 198.)

Mr. Beamont, in his "Mascy of Rixton" pedigree (in the Warrington Museum), assigns to this Hamon Mascy two other daughters, namely Katherine and Margery. Katherine is given as wife to William Hyde of Hyde. I can find no trace of such an alliance amongst the deeds of this period. Thomas Hyde of Norbury was one of the feoffees of Hamon Mascy, in 1497, but he was related to the family, being grandson to the John Hyde of Norbury (who died in 1460), having married for his first wife Matilda, daughter of Hamon Mascy of Rixton by Ellen Horton. Margery is stated to have married Henry, son and heir-apparent of Richard Risley, and, in 3 Edward IV, to have described herself as such, and daughter of Hamon Mascy of Rixton. This match belongs to the previous generation. It is scarcely possible for a man who only married in 1464 to have had a daughter, already a wife, the same year. Neither could she have been by a former marriage, as Hamon's parents, Hamon and Johanna, were not married until after February, 1438.

John Mascy. 1502.

VII.—John Mascy, the third son of "Hamon the father," succeeded his brother Hamon in the family estates, paying to his superior lord, Sir Thomas Botiler of Bewsey, Knt., the 7th March, 1502 (17 Henry VII,) twenty shillings and ten pence for his relief of his manor of Rixton, and doing homage to Sir Thomas at Holynfer, the 20th year of Henry VII, before Sir John Bothe, Knt., Matthew Snede, and Thomas Hawarden and others. (Homage Roll of Warrington.)

On 25th September, 23 Henry VII, Sir John Bothe, Knt., acknowledges and gives acquittance for the sum of thirty-one shillings, paid by John Mascy, brother and nearest heir of Hamon

Mascy of Rixton, as relief for the lands which he holds of the Crown in Coggeshull and Whitley, under the manor of Whit within the Halton fee. (W. 88.)

John Mascy appears to have refused to be dubbed a Knight, on 17th January, 20 Henry VII, Thomas Hoblis, clerk, gav receipt to John Mascy of the county of Lancaster, Esq., for f marks, being the part payment of his fine to the King for pard to be released from "thorder of Knighthood of the Bathe at "creacōn of my lord prince Henr"; and on 26th January in t following year, on payment of a further five marks, he receive full acquittance of the fine. (R. 146 & 146 B.) Another mem randum of fines shows that at Trinity Term, 2 Henry VIII, Jo Mascy de Rixton, Esq., was again made to pay for his unwilli ness to receive knighthood: the sum his refusal cost him bei 53*s.* 4*d.* (R. 145.)

John Mascy added to his property by purchasing from Willia Gernet of Warrington, in December, 3 Henry VIII, a medi of one acre of land in Warrington, lying between Sir Thom Boteler's lands on one side and touching "the Merce" on t other side. (W. 93.) He also bought, the next year, from Jam Johnson, late of Rixton, (son of John Gynkynson, sometime Bowdon), premises in Glasebroke, which had belonged to Jo Gynkynson. (R. 147, &c.)

John acted as trustee, with Thomas Leycester de Nether Tabl Thomas Legh de High Legh, Thomas Hawardyne de Wolst Gilbert Domvile de Lyme, Simon Byrome, and Laurence Langt chaplain, for Gilbert Mascy, son of John Mascy late of Warri ton, on the 7th December, 1510, (W. 89-90 and R. 144,) whi Gilbert describes himself as "chaplain," and is evidently same person who, on 30th September, 1 Henry VIII, paid to Thomas Boteler 10*s.* relief of his lands in Warrington. Gilb was doubtless a connection of the Rixton family, though h does not appear. I am inclined to suppose he was grandso the Richard Mascy who in 1432 married Alice, widow of Ralph Langton. There is no deed to explain the uses of feoffment of 1510.

We find John Mascy of Rixton amongst the Commissioners ppointed, 3 Henry VIII, to collect the subsidy in Lancashire. Rot. Parl., vol. vi. p. 40.) He also seems to have joined with he many Lancashire knights and gentlemen who obeyed the call o defend their country from the ravages of the Scotch king, and vas possibly amongst those

> "The lusty Stanley stout did lead,

But like his father-in-law, Sir John Bothe, John Mascy fell on Flodden Field, or as it is called in his Inquisition post mortem, at the battle of "Branxton Moor," on the 9th September, 5 Henry VIII (1513). The Inquisition after his death was not taken until the 2nd September, 10 Henry VIII, when it was found that, at his death in 1513, his heir was his son William, aged then nine years. He died seized of the manors of Rixton and Glasebroke, and land in those two places as well as in Penyngton, Warrington, and Pulton, co. Lancaster. (Inq. p. m. Duch. Lanc., vol. v., 10 Henry VIII, No. 9.) He also held land in Cheshire. John was, as we have seen, under the age of sixteen years in 1465, and he married in June, 1500, Anne, daughter of Sir John Bothe of Barton, Knt. (R. 142) by whom he had issue four sons, namely, William, Hamlet, James, and Richard. Anne, his widow, married, before 1526, Thomas Starkey, of Stretton, co. Chester, Esq.

On the 15th March, 17 Henry VIII, Sir Alexander Radcliff, Knt., Edward Molyneux, clerk, Thurstan Tyldsley, Roger Bradshagh, and Thomas Gerard, Esquires, acted as arbitrators between William Mascy of Rixton, co. Lancaster, Esqr. (son and heir of John Mascy deceased), and his mother Anne, with Thomas Starky his step-father, as to the thirds and dower due to Anne as widow of John Mascy, and they decided that the Starkys were to "suffer such things for the determynation and extynguishment of all such right, title or interest of Dower or thirds," as they had in right of Anne in the lands that were

John Mascy's in Lancashire and Cheshire. William Mascy on his part to secure an annuity of £4. 6*s.* 8*d.* to Anne for life recompense of her thirds and dower. (R. 152.) The term the arbitrations were agreed to, and on 1st May in the same y (17 Henry VIII) the two Starkys released the dower, (R. 154.)

Hamon or Hamnet Mascy, second son of John, is named the will of his brother William in 1538, and is said to h married Alice Kuerdale. James Mascy, the third son John is also named in his brother's will, 1538, and marr Anne, daughter of John Cheyny of Wisterton, co. Chester, ge (Flower's Visit. of Lanc., 1567.) This James founded the fam of Mascy of Carlton, who entered their arms at Flowe Visitation of Lancashire in 1567, as Quarterly: 1, Quarte gules and argent, in the second quarter a mullet sable [Masc 2, Argent, on a bend sable three covered cups of the field [Rixto 3, Vert, three falcons, argent [Pennington]; 4, Argent, a squir erect, gules [Horton]; In fess point, a crescent. (Vol. 81, C Soc., p. 56). These arms vary in the marshalling of the quarte and in the third quarter, with the arms entered by the Masc of Rixton, at Benalt's Visitation in 1533.

James Mascy, who was living in 1567, had by his wife Anr three children, George Mascy, son and heir in 1567, Alic Mascy, who became the wife of John Butler of Kirkland, c Lancaster, gent., before 1567, and John Mascy, the second so who was of Layton, co. Lancaster, and as such is named i the marriage settlement of Hamlet Mascy of Rixton, wit Dorothy Bradshagh, in 1615. (R. 174.) He married Ellen, on daughter of Thomas and Alice Singleton of Stayninge, Esq., an died 30th October, 1618, leaving two daughters and coheirs, viz. Ellyn, wife of Edward Veale of Meathorp, co. Lancaster, an Alice, wife of Thomas Bamber of Poulton, co. Lancaster (St George's Visit. of Lanc., 1613).

John's other son, Richard Mascy, was named in his brothe William's will, 1538, but I have found no further record o him.

William Mascy. 1513.

VIII. William Mascy, son and heir of John, born 1504, being aged nine years when his father was killed at Flodden field in September, 1513. He was in ward to Sir Thomas Boteler, lord of Warrington, the 6th October, 1523 (Annals of the Lords of Warrington, p. 431).

On 24th April, 1527, John Assheley released to William, son and heir of John Mascy, late of Rixton, four messuages in Rixton in the several tenures of Ralph Caldwell, Richard Abbot, John Partington and John Yate, with two messuages in Glasebroke let to Pernel Hasilhurst and Alice Ashton, which were amongst the premises granted to John Assheley of Assheley, co. Chester, Sir John Bothe, &c., in 12 Henry VII, by Hamon Mascy, uncle to the said William (R. 153) but there is no deed to explain the release.

William must have been married before this date, as his eldest son and heir was born in December, 1525. William's wife was Anne, daughter of Richard Aston of Aston, near Runcorn; Sir Peter Leycester giving the date of their marriage as 10 Henry VIII (1519).

In March, 18 Henry VIII, William Mascy and John Assheley grant to Humphrey Barlow of Barton, a lease for eighty years (the term to commence after the death of George Clarke and Letys his wife), of the messuage held by the Clerkes "in the "tunshyp of Glasebruke," paying a yearly rent for the same to Sir Laurence Langshawe, priest, at the Chapel of the Holynfare, and to his successors, of 13*s.* 4*d.*, "also the average as hath been "accustomed." Humphrey is bound by the lease to "well and "sufficiently reparell and uphold" the messuage and buildings during the period of his tenancy. (R. 155.) This lease adds another name to the list of Holynfer Chapel priests in Warrington Church Notes. Laurence Langshawe was seemingly the immediate predecessor of Randle Woodward, the lease being made just before the agreement was entered into by William Mascy and John Assheley, with Richard Warburton, the 19th May, 18 Henry VIII, as to the next presentation to Holynfer Chap being given to Woodward (Warrington Ch. Notes, p. 206).

On 12th April, 29 Henry VIII, William Mascy enfeoffe John Aston, son and heir apparent of Thomas Aston, Esq., an William Mascy, chaplain, of four messuages in Glasebroke, let severally to John Gatcliff, John Clare, Petronilla Shaw, widow, and Gilbert Fynche, also certain pasturage in Rixton called "Barrowfield," and a part of the enclosure called "The farther "Northfeld," for securing an annuity of 46*s.* 4*d.* to his son John Mascy to take effect upon his (William's) death. (R. 167.) The same day certain other premises in Rixton were granted to the same trustees for an annuity to the same amount for William's other son Thomas Mascy. (R. 157.)

William Mascy, at the requisition of Thurstan Tyldesley, Esq., and in compliance with certain covenants made between them on 12th April, 29 Henry VIII, "for the marriage of Richard "Massy, son and heir of the said William, with Anne, daughter "of Thurstan Tildesley and now wife of the said Richard," by his deed dated 16th April, 29 Henry VIII (1538), enfeoffs Thomas Starkey of Stretton, Esq., William Radcliff, Esq., and James Massy of Carlton, gent., of certain closes—amongst which appear the names of those granted for the jointure of Alice Botiler in 1464—and certain pastures in Rixton, to the yearly value of £12, to be held for the use of William Mascy during his life, and then to the trustees for them to hold the same for seven years, for raising of portions for William's two daughters, Anne and Margaret, and after the seven years have expired to the use of Anne, "now wife of Richard Massy"; on her death the same to revert to the said Richard Mascy and his heirs male, on failure of whom to the heirs male of Hamon Mascy, his ancestor. (R. 158.)

The following day, also at Thurstan Tildesley's "request," William Mascy grants to the same trustees his capital messuage in Rixton, called Rixton Hall, together with all his lands, tenements, and hereditaments in Rixton, Glasebroke, Pulton, Penyngton, and Warrington, co. Lancaster, and in Coggeshull, Comberbach, Nether and Over Whitley, Thelwall, and Altrinham, co. Chester, in settlement, after William's death, for the se of Richard and Anne Mascy and their heirs male. (R. 159.)

William Mascy's will is dated 18th May, 1538 (30 Henry VIII), nd in it he leaves his body to be buried in the Rixton Chapel in Warrington Church, and makes the following bequests to his elations: A black garment to his son-in-law Thomas Ayston Aston); a stagge to his brother Hamnet Mascy; a bay nag to his brother James, and a gelding to his brother Richard; to the Chapel of Hollyn Green a calf, to maintain God's service. To his mother, Mrs. Starkey, he leaves a white gelding; and a heifer, to keep up the Chapel of Stretton. His son John Mascy was to have a black ambling colt, and his other son Thomas his sword. He also names his daughters Anne and Mergot. (Lanc. and Chesh. Wills, Chet. Soc., vol. li. pp. 201 and 202.) He died the 19th day of May, 30 Henry VIII, the inquisition after his death being taken 7th September, 32 Henry VIII, at which latter date his son and heir Richard Mascy was declared to be aged fifteen years and nine months. (Inq. p. m. Duch. Lanc. vol. viii. 32 Henry VIII, No. 17.) Besides dying seized of the manor of Rixton, with lands there in Glasebroke, Pulton, Holyngrene, and Warrington, he also held, under the king, land in Over Whitley and Coggeshull. (W. 102 and 103.)

This William Mascy entered his arms at the Visitation of Lancashire by Benalt in 1533 as, Quarterly, first, Argent, on a bend Sable, three covered cups of the field; second, quarterly, Gules and Argent, in the second quarter a mullet Sable; third, Argent, three birds close Vert; fourth, Argent, a squirrel sejant Gules, holding a nut Or. (Chet. Soc. Pub. vol. ci.)

William Mascy had, besides his son and heir Richard, two sons, Thomas and John, both of whom, as already shewn, had annuities for life settled upon them, and who are also named in their father's will.

John Mascy, in 1576, acted as guardian to his great nephew Hamlet Aston of Glasebroke, being then described of Hollynsgrene. (Duch. Lanc. Plead.) He was still alive in 1588; as William Mascy of Rixton, Esq., leased to one John Smith on the 9th of November, 30 Elizabeth, a messuage, cottage, and land i Glasebroke, the rent of which he was to pay to the said Williar "immediately after the death of John Mascie of Glasebroke "gent." (Rixton Leases, No. 11.)

Mr. Beamont gives William another son named Hamlet, wh he states married Joan, daughter of William Bothe of Dunhan Massey, but no mention appears of this Hamlet, nor is such a marriage recorded in the Bothe pedigrees. In the pedigree o the Rixton Mascys, amongst the Dodsworth MSS. (vol. xxxix fol. 152), a like match is given, but as this Hamlet has issue— Hamlet, William a priest, Anne, John, married to Anne, daughter of Sir John Bothe of Barton, it becomes evident that the match is intended for that between Hamon Mascy and Johanna, daughter of Sir Robert Bothe of Dunham Massey, in 1438.

In Benalt's Visitation three daughters are accredited to William, namely, Douce, Anne, and Margaret. Douce became the wife of Thomas, son and heir of John Ashton of Penketh (Flower and St. George's Visits. of Lanc., 1567 and 1613). The marriage must have taken place before 1538, as William Mascy names "Thomas Ayston, my son-in-law," in his will. Some dispute arose between the Ashtons and Mascys in later years, for, in 18 Elizabeth, "Hamlet Ashton of Gray's Inn, son and heir of "Hamlet Ashton of Glasebroke, co. Lancaster, deceased," complained that, his father dying seized of certain premises in Glasebroke, they should have descended to his son, the complainant, but that certain deeds and writings relating to the same coming into the possession of John Mascy of Hollingrent (Hollingsgreen), co. Lancaster, gent., he by colour of the deeds entered possession, and during the minority of the orator "has "taken away marl to the quantity of six thousand loads." Hamlet Ashton therefore prays the Court of Chancery that John Mascy be made to produce the writings. (Duchy Plead., vol. lix. a. 13, 18 Eliz.) In another bill of complaint of the same date, he declares he is lawfully seized of a third part of the nor and moss of Glasebroke and of Glasebroke waste, which and his ancestors had enjoyed in common with Richard Mascye, lord of the other two parts. But now, Richard Mascye ceiving that "your orator is young and unskilful and without iends"; Richard further "being a man of great wealth and reatly allyed there, and having gotten sundry evidences and ritings into his possession, doth suborne and maintain all his enants of another manor called Ryxton, to enter and put their attle on the waste of Glasebroke, and hath also enclosed everal portions of the waste." Ashton prays, therefore, that hn and Richard Mascye may appear at Westminster to make swer. The bill is dated 11th March, 1576. Richard Mascy ng 21st July, 1579, answer is made to the bill, 28th January, 86, by William Mascie, who for himself disclaims any right or im to Glasebroke or the wastes there, named in the bill, cepting as guardian of his son Richard Mascie, who is about rteen years old, and states that his (William's) father Richard ascie was lawfully seized of the manor of Glasebroke and the aste, and denies that Hamlet Ashton's father was seized of any rt of it. (Duchy Plead. vol. 95, a. 46.) I fancy the Ashtons ust have been able in the end to prove their right, as when ichard Mascy in 1598 purchased from Ireland the manorial ghts of Glasebroke, there was a chief rent of six and eight ence due from John, son and heir apparent of Hamlet Ashton, te of Glasebroke, to the chief lord for his premises in Glase-oke.

The other two daughters of William Mascy, Anne and Mergot, Margaret, had portions assured them by deed, dated 16th pril, 29 Henry VIII, (R. 158,) and were at the time of their ther's death both quite young. I have not discovered if they arried. Mr. Beamont gives William another daughter named ane, who he states married John Davenport of Davenport, but y the Devonport pedigree in Ormerod's Cheshire, this Jane Iascy is said to be daughter and co-heir of Richard Mascy, a ounger brother of Sir Geoffrey Mascy of Tatton. No mention f the Davenports occurs in any of the Mascy papers of this date.

Richard Mascy. 1538.

IX.—Richard Mascy, son and heir of William, being a fifteen years and nine months at the taking of his fatl
Inquisition post mortem in September, 1541, was therefore bor December, 1525. He succeeded to the Rixton estates, ha married in childhood Anne, daughter of Thurstan Tildesle Wordley, Esq. When Benalt made his Visitation of Lancas in 1533, the marriage had already taken place, as he states i his entry of the Rixton Mascy's pedigree, remarking that "
"elder of them passeth not vii years." (Chetham Soc. P vol. ci.)

In 1556 Richard Mascy set about the buying back of th lands and farms with which his great-uncle, Hamon Mascy, h endowed the chantry or chapel of Hollynfare, and which, at dissolution of the chantries, 1 Edward VI, had been confiscat by the Crown. The indenture of purchase is dated 8th Octob
2 and 3 Philip and Mary, by which "Sir Thomas Holcroft
"Valeryaull, co. Chester, Knt.", in consideration of £100
ceived, agrees to sell and convey to Richard Mascy of Rixtc Esq., "all that the late chauntry foundet in the chapel of H
"lynfare within the parish of Warrington," with all the lanc
tenements, &c., to the late chantry belonging, situate in Glas broke and Rixton, and let to Charles Spakeman, Hamnet Yat Thomas Yate, and George Clerke, "which chauntry and lanc
"the said Sir Thomas had conveyed to him (amongst oth
"things) by the gift or grant of our Sovereign Ladye the Quee
"by her graces Letters patent, bearing date Winchester 23 Jul
"in the 2d year of her reign." It is agreed that another £10 is to be paid by Richard Mascy when the lands have been finall conveyed to him. (R. 160, 160 B, 161, and W. 100.) The Fin of the sale is dated at Lancaster, Monday after the Assumption
3 and 4 Philip and Mary, Richard Massye, Esq., plaintiff
Thomas Holcroft, Knt., deforciant of four messuages, gardens and orchards, 60 acres of land, 40 acres of meadow, 6 of pasture, 20 of wood, and 40 of common and moor, with 100 acres of oss and turbary, with appurtenances in Glasebroke and Rixton, ong with the chantry of Hollynfayre in the parish of Warrington. R. 162.) The licence of alienation from the Crown is dated 9th May, 3 and 4 Philip and Mary, the seal to which is in splen- id condition. (R. 163.) A lease, dated 10th Dec., 2 Edward VI, rom the Duchy of Lancaster, shows that on the confiscation of he chantries, Hollynfare and its lands of endowment were let to ir William Norreys, Knt., for 21 years, at £5 a year, to be paid nto the Duchy revenues. (R. 160 c.) I conclude he must have urrendered this lease, as no mention is made of its existence in he deeds of conveyance and sale from Holcroft to Mascy. In 560 and 1561, Richard paid four shillings as his fine for homage, &c., to the Crown for the chantry of Hollynfare. (W. 101.) He ound himself to Thomas Boteler, the feudal lord of Rixton, the 8th April, 1563, to pay 20 pence yearly for his homage and fealty at Bewsey, at the close of Easter each year. (Homage Roll of Warrington, p. 38.)

Richard Mascy, by deed dated 19th December, 14 Elizabeth, grants to William Liversage of Whilock, co. Chester, Esq., and John Massie of Coddington, Esq., certain premises in Warrington, Pulton, Fernehead, Rixton, and Glasebroke, co. Lancaster, and in Thelwall, co. Chester, of the yearly value of £20. 0*s.* 0*d.*, to be held in trust for the use of "Dorothy Massie, daughter and heir "of Peter Danyell, deceased, and now wife of William Massie, "son and heir apparent of the said Richard Massie," as was specified and agreed on in a pair of indentures of the marriage contract of the said William and Dorothy, made between Richard Massie of the one part, and Thomas Danyell of Over Tabley, co. Chester, of the other, and dated 14th December, 14 Elizabeth. (R. 164.) Dorothy Danyell was declared, at the death of her father, Peter Danyell of Over Tabley, the 9th November, 1557, to have been aged four years and three months (Ormerod's Cheshire, vol. i. p. 473); and she was evidently under the guardianship of her uncle, Thomas Danyell, who succeeded her father in the possession of "The Hall of the Wood," in Over Tabley.

A bill was filed in chancery, 25 Elizabeth, to perpetuate testimo of a claim, in which William Mascy of Rixton, and Dorothy wife, the daughter and heir of Peter Danyell, late of Over Tabl co. Chester, recite how Dorothy's late father was, by Lett Patent dated 10th April, 3 and 4 Philip and Mary, granted t capital messuage with appurtenances, called "The Hall of t "Wood," situate in Over Tabley, co. Chester, to be held of t king and queen, by knight's service "in capite;" and Pet Danyell dying so seized of the same, they ought to have descend to the said Dorothy, his daughter, but that one Peter Danyell, s and heir of Thomas Danyell, a younger brother of Peter Danye deceased, "dothe wrongfully detain possession of the premis "and to give colour to his unlawful and injurious dealings hat "published that Peter Danyell, the father of Dorothy, made h "last will and testament the 27th day of July, 1557, and by "bequeathed the premises to Peter Danyell junior and his hei "male; whereas Dorothy and William say they are able to sho "the true will of Peter Danyell the senior, of the same date "written in his own hand, where there is no mention of such "demise." (W. 105.) It is feared that Dorothy was unable t prove the will to be forged, and therefore did not obtain he rights; at any rate Peter Danyell, junior, and his descendant continued to possess the debated estates.

Richard Mascy and William his son, on 1st August, 1574, granted to Edward Tildesley of Morleys, co. Lancaster, and to William Starkye of Stretton, a rent charge of £40 a year, to take effect on Richard's death, for securing portions of 100 marks apiece to such of Richard Mascy's daughters as might remain unmarried at their father's death. (R. 165.)

Richard Mascy died the 15th July, 21 Elizabeth, and by his Inquisition post mortem taken at Wigan, co. Lancaster, the 9th October, 21 Elizabeth, it is declared that he died seized of the Manor of Rixton with its appurtenances—20 messuages, 2 cottages, 1 water mill, 1 windmill, 50 acres of land, 100 acres of meadow, 300 acres of pasture, and 50 of moor, moss, and bary with appurtenances in Rixton; the right of fishing in the ersey; also, 4 other messuages, gardens, and orchards, with acres of land, 6 of meadow, 20 of pasture, and 20 of moor, oss, and turbary, with appurtenances in Rixton and Glasebroke ce parcel of the Chantry of Hollynfare, lately dissolved. Also e manor of Glasebroke with its appurtenances, 6 messuages, cottages, 10 gardens, 50 acres of land, 20 of meadow, 50 of sture, and 100 of moor, moss, and turbary, with appurtenances Glasebrook. Of these, the messuages and gardens, &c., late e possession of the Chantry of Hollynsfare are held of the ueen by military service "in capite," and are valued at a clear nual rent of xxx^{s}; the remainder of the premises being held Thomas Butler, Knt., by military service, and by a rent of [1 2*s.* 1½*d.*, and valued yearly at £xvj. He was also seized of vo burgages and two gardens, with appurtenances, in Warring- n, held of Sir Thomas Butler, Knt., by fealty, and valued at ght shillings a year. In the margin of the Inquisition it is oted that Richard Massie, being seized of all these lands, had y a deed dated 17th September, 20 Elizabeth, granted to Sir illiam Bothe, Knt., and others, his manors and lands for the se of the said Richard for his life, and, after his death, to the se of Richard the son of William Massie, son and heir to the aid Richard, and to the male heirs of Richard Massie the ounger, and for default to the use of William Massie, son of the aid William Massie, and his male heirs, and for default to hurstan Massie. Richard Massie, further, died seized of a nessuage and three acres of land, meadow, &c., in Fernehead, eld, with other land, of Thomas Langton, Esq., in socage, and alued at eighteen shillings. (R. 169.)

Besides William, the son and heir, Richard Mascy had Richard, the second son, living November, 1615, when he is named in the settlement made on his nephew William's marriage. (R. 174.) He was the father of four sons, Thurstan, Richard, Thomas, and Tildesley, all named in his will in 1632. Of these four sons, in a settlement of March, 1642, Thurstan is described

"of Southwarke, co. Surrey," and Thomas, "of Rixto (R. 185 B.)

In August, 8 James I, William Tatton of Withernsha gave this Richard a lease of a farm at Etchells, co. Chester, the lives of his two sons Richard and Thurstan Mascy (Rix.
Leases, No. 162), which lease was assigned in 1625 to Willi
Mascy, his nephew. (W. 111.)

Thomas Mascy, this Richard's third son, became a yeom holding farms in Rixton and Glasebroke of the head of family. In October, 1629, we find Richard Mascy, the th lord of Rixton, leasing to his kinsman Thomas, for 21 years certain messuage, &c., in Glasebroke, on payment of £60 fi and an annual rent of 20*s.* 10*d.* (Rixton Leases, No. 43.) A the 20th October, 1641, a cottage in Rixton is let to him for t lives of Thomas himself, of Anne his wife, and of Dorothy the daughter. (Rixton Leases, No. 156.) He surrendered the leases 23rd February, 1655, to Gilbert Ireland, who then he the confiscated estates of "Squire" Mascy, and on payment £30 obtained a new lease of his premises for the same thr lives, and at a yearly rent of only 8*s.*, with the doing of "or
"day's weedinge of corne, one day's drawing turves, one da
"filling and hooking marles, two sufficient rent hens at S
"Thomas the Apostle's 'feast,' together with the shearing of or "half acre of corne and setting up the same in riders of eigh
"sheaves betwixt the number of thirteen and fifteen thraves
"the said half acre." He was also to grind all his corn an grain at Ireland's mill, appear and do suit at the court, &c besides all the amercements, boons, services, &c., usually du for the lands. (Rixton Leases, No. 142.)

The above-named Richard made his will the 27th of Decembe 1632, describing himself therein as "of Rixton, gentleman."
He directed that he was to be "buried at my Parish Church c
"Warrington in our auntient buriale (place) wheare my ancestor
"have been laide." He divides his goods into three equal parts one of which he leaves to his "now wyfe," Margaret Mascye another part to his sons Richard, Thomas and Tildesley Mascy

"equally to be devided amongst them for their childe's portions." The third part he reserves for himself, out of which his debts and funeral expenses are to be paid, and "unto Thurstan Mascye my "sonn the sum of Fortie shillings for a full satisfaction of his "chyldes p[t] of goods in regard that the said Thurstan hath been "a chargeable chyld unto me and hath putt me to more chardge "than any other of my children are like to have for their "portions." The residue of his own part of his goods was to be divided between his wife Margaret and his son Richard. He desires that whereas "theire is a bedsteed of myne within the "Hall of Rixton in my nephewes chamber," it is to form part of his goods to be divided. The will was proved in April, 1633. (Chester Registry of Wills.) He was buried at Warrington, 17th February, 1632-3.

The third son of Richard, "the squire" of Rixton and Anne Tildesley, was James Mascy, named in the settlement of November, 1615. He entered Gray's Inn in 1587, and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Singleton of Staining (St. George's Visit., 1613), but left no issue. He was buried at Warrington, 29th January, 1628-9, being described in the Parish Register as "gent and lawier."

Another son was John Mascy, named in the will of his sister Dorothy Mascy in 1600, with his brothers Richard and James, but no mention is made of him in the settlement of 1615, which leaves one to suppose he was then dead, and probably he died childless, as the Rixton property was settled, on failure of the male issue of William, Richard, and James, on John Mascy of Layton, who was a cousin. Of daughters, Richard Mascy had by Anne Tyldesley three, namely, Mary, Jane, and Dorothy.

Mary Mascy married, before her father's death, Robert, son and heir of Robert Blundell of Ince Blundell. The bond from Robert Blundell of Ince to Richard Mascy of Rixton, to fulfil articles of an indenture in regard to a marriage to be had between Robert the son of Blundell and Mary the daughter of Mascy, is amongst the Blundell family papers preserved at Ince Blundell, and is dated 30th day of August, . . . Elizabeth; but the Re T. E. Gibson, who, having carefully examined all the Inc Blundell muniments, kindly affords me this information, notice that, curiously enough, the year of the Queen's reign has bee omitted, and no further deeds appear relating to the marriage As Robert Blundell, their heir, was, at St. George's Visitatio of Lancashire, declared to be aged forty years in 1614 (Chet. Soc vol. lxxxii. p. 77), we may conclude that the marriage of Mary Mascy with Robert Blundell took place about the 15th year o Queen Elizabeth's reign. She was still living in 1614.

Jane Mascy, daughter of Richard, is, I conclude, the Jane Mascy named in the will of her grandfather, Thurstan Tildesley, in 1547, and she married, 10th February, 5 Elizabeth (1563), Hamlet, son and heir of Thomas Bruche of Bruche, co. Lancaster. On 6th February, 5 Elizabeth, Richard Mascy, in consideration of this marriage, had undertaken to pay £200 in various stated sums to Thomas Bruche, but it appears by pleadings in Chancery that he failed to perform his part of the contract, the executors of Thomas having to sue him for what remained. (Duch. Lanc. Plead., 5 Eliz., vol. xvi., V. No. 1.)

Dorothy, Richard Mascy's other daughter, died unmarried in 1605, making her will the 14th May, 1600. In it she names her brother Richard Mascy, with his children Dorothy, Richard, and Anne, also her brothers John and James Mascy, and her cousin Thurstan Tildesley, with his children Edward, Thomas, and Anne Tildesley. Her will was proved 23rd September, 1605 (Chester Registry).

Richard Mascy's wife Anne (née Tildesley) survived him some years, being alive 1st August, 33 Elizabeth, when she joined with her son William in the letting of a farm at Rixton. (Rixton Leases, No. 121.)

William Mascy. 1579.

X. William Mascy, son and heir of Richard, was born in 1552, being aged 27 years at the date of the taking of his father's Inquisition post mortem, the 9th October, 21 Elizabeth; and he married, as already mentioned (in 1572), Dorothy, daughter and heiress of Peter Danyell of Over Tabley.

By an indenture, dated 15th January, 17 Elizabeth, he and his wife assign to Richard Mascy (his father), and to Edward Tildesley of "Morlet," co. Lancaster (his uncle), the jointure of £20 a year which had been settled upon Dorothy Danyell on her marriage with the said William Mascy. The same jointure was by this deed to be held by Richard and Edward during William's life, on this condition, that "for the life of the said William, "Richard Massye and Edward Tildesley are to well and suffi- "ciently fynde and maintain the said William and Dorothy his "wife, and also one man servant and one maid servant to attend "and wait upon the said William and Dorothy; with meat and "drink, clothes and lodging at the now dwelling house of Richard "Massye, or at the dwelling house of Edward Tildesley where he "shall be conversant and abiding." (R. 167.)

Livery, under the Great Seal, was granted to William Mascy, gent., the 16th of May, 22 Elizabeth, of all the premises in Lancashire of which his father, Richard Mascy of Rixton, Esq., died seized held of the Crown. (R. 170.)

The parish church of Warrington was about this time being restored and enlarged; by which latter, it seems the Mascy Chapel was encroached upon, and some dispute engendered between William Mascy and the parish of Warrington. Dr. Leche, Chancellor of the Consistory Court of Chester, was, therefore, called upon to decide between the parties, and on the 12th April, 1586 (28 Elizabeth), he made the following award "between Mr. William Massie and the Churchwardens of the "Church of Warrington concerning a distance of place between "the chapel of the said Mr. Massie and the said parish church." "I doe injoyne the churche wardens toe build uppe the roume "or place betweene the steeple and Mr. Massie his chappell "upon the charges of the parish. And for that (as the said "chappell is nowe altered from the frame or fasshion of the oulde award being agreed to by the various parties concerned, M Mascy having received the said five pounds, " agreed to permi

" the said parish to erect their buildinge upon the piller an " arches aforesaide." The instrument of agreement being mad public, at the request of the parish, by " Mr. Parson Hurward, and by Gilbert Taylor acting for Mr. Mascy, the 20th Octobe 1586, it being recorded in the presence of Edward Butler
Bewsey, Esq., Thomas Norris, gent., John Asshton, gent
" Simon Hurward, parson there," John Stopforth, one of th churchwardens, and Gilbert Taylor, &c. (R. 171.)

From the wording of this Award one is led to conjectur that the Mascys had lately made some alterations in, or rebuil their chapel, which seems confirmed by Sampson Erdeswicke having a few years before (in 1572) called it " le Nova Capella.'
It was doubtless when the alterations in the church at this time were taking place that the crypt was filled up, as noticed in Warrington Church Notes.

In 1587, William Mascy, with Miles Gerard, was called upon to furnish a demi-lance towards the armament of the country. He died in 1595, having had by his wife, Dorothy Danyell, Richard (who succeeded him), William (a priest, named in Dugdale's Visitation of Lancashire, 1664, and on whom the Rixton estates were settled, in failure of his brother Richard's male issue in 1578), and Thurstan (also named in the settlement of 1578): but of neither can I learn more. There do not appear to have been any daughters, or, if there were, they perhaps died in infancy. Dorothy survived her husband some years, and had, 39 and 40 Elizabeth, some trouble to obtain a portion of her jointure, having to sue certain tenants for unlawful possession of premises in Rixton and Glasebroke and Fernehead. (Duch. Cal. of Pleadings, vol. iii, p. 379.)

Richard Mascy. 1595.

XI.—Richard Mascy succeeded to his father's estates in 1595, and as he was aged 13 in 1586 (Duch. Pleadings, vol. xcv. 46 A), was born in 1573. He married (but in what year I cannot discover) Anne, daughter of Richard Middleton of Middleton Hall, co. Westmoreland. (Dugdale's Visitation, 1664.)

In July, 1597, Edward Norris of Speke, Henry Stanley of Bickerstath, and Richard Mascy of Rixton, Esquires, made an agreement with Miles Gerard of Ince, Esq., concerning the furnishing of one demi-lance "for her majesty's service in warres," by which the three agreed to pay £12 to Miles Gerard for their three parts of the expense of this demi-lance. Gerard on his part undertakes to find the said demi-lance's horse and his furniture, viz., "arrow complete, lance staffe and cast of pistolles, "sword, dagger, and girdle, demi-lance saddle, brydle, aud their "furniture all new and serviceable, of the value of £7 10*s*." He is also to keep in readiness "the demi-lance horse with a "rider arrayed and well appointed," in case they are required. It is further agreed that if the lance is called to serve in the wars, then the three are to pay Miles Gerard £2 each for his expenses, but if, after being called out, he is not required to go to the wars, then Gerard is to refund to each of them their £2 (W. 106.)

The 14th April, 1598, Richard Massye was able, for the sum of £50 paid to Thomas Ireland of Bewsey, co. Lancaster, Esq (now his superior lord in place of the Butlers) to change the tenure of his manors of Rixton and Glasebroke—which had hitherto been held "of the manor of Warrington by Knight's "service, suite to the Corte Baron of the said Thomas as of his "manor of Warrington, de tribus septimanus in tres septimanus, "and also by suite to the Corte Leete of our Sovereigne Ladie "the Queen, twyce in the yeare houlden at Warrington," and by a yearly rent of £1. 2*s.* 1¼*d.* for Rixton, 12*d.* for Glasebroke, and 5*s.* 4*d.* for premises in Warrington—into a socage tenure. Thomas Ireland releasing for himself and his heirs all claim to Knight's service, suit of Court Baron, homage, ward, marriage, and relief in any way formerly due from the said manors, saving a rent of 1*d.* yearly for the manors of Rixton and Glasebroke and the premises in Warrington, with fealty and appearance at the Court Leet twice a year. Thomas Ireland and Mary his wife giving full warranty of the change. (R. 173.) For a further sum of £50, Thomas Ireland sells all manner of improvement and encroachment made in the lordship of Rixton and Glasebroke; with all wastes and commons, waifs, wards, and other manorial rights, together with 6*s.* 8*d.* chief rents, with all the duties and services payable and due from John Ashton, son and heir of Hamlet Ashton late of Glasebroke, gent., deceased. (R. 173 B.)

In 1610, Richard Mascy being seized jointly with Thomas Wilne of a close in Poulton, called "ye Bothomes," containing 4½ acres and 32 wood falls, they agreed to divide the same, 22nd May, 8 James I. (W. 109.)

Richard Mascy of Rixton was executor to the will of Henry Byrom of Byrom, dated 14th April, 1613. (W. 110.)

In February, 11 James I (1613), we come across the reward to a faithful servant in the shape of a lease, granted by Richard Mascy of Rixton to Isabel Daniell, alias Hall, "in consideration "of twenty marks, but most especially for the consideration of

"her long and trustie service of twenty years done to Dorothy "Mascy, mother of the said Richard, and the said Dorothy before "her death willing and requiring that so it be done," of the messuage and tenement in Warrington, late in the tenure of George Keuardale, for the term of twenty-one years, at a yearly rent of seven shillings and the usual boons, averages, &c. (Rixton Leases, 208.) In the inventory of Richard Mascy's goods in 1645, one of the rooms in Rixton Hall is called "Isabelle's chamber"; perhaps this was in memory of the faithful servant of the family.

On 11th November, 1615 (13 James I), an Indenture was made between Roger Bradshagh of Haigh, co. Lancaster, Esq., of one part, and Richard Massye of Rixton, Esq., and Hamlet, his son and heir apparent, of the other, which states that a marriage is to take place at or before St. Andrew the Apostle, in Winter next ensuing, between Hamlet Massye and "Doretye," daughter of Roger Bradshagh, and that in consideration of this marriage and of £700 by Roger to Richard paid, the two Massyes undertake to convey to Sir Richard Molyneux of Sefton, Knt. and Banneret, Sir George Bothe of Dunham Massye, Knt. and Baronet, Sir Peter Legh of Lyme, Knt., and Robert Blundell of Gray's Inn, co. Middlesex, as Trustees, the manors of Rixton and Glasebroke, with all manorial rights, also land and premises in Pulton, Fernyhead, and Warrington, so as to insure a jointure of £60 a year to Dorothy, as wife of Hamlet. The estates are to be held for the use of Hamlet and Dorothy, and after their death to the use of Richard the father, if he live so long, he being bound to maintain Hamlet's children. On his death the estates were to pass to Hamlet's sons in tail male, "for default to "Richard Massye, uncle to Richard Massye, the partie to these "presents," and his heirs male; for default "to James Massye, "another uncle to the said Richard Massye, the partie to these "presents," and his heirs male; for default to John Massye of Layton, co. Lancaster, Esq., and his heirs male; for default to William Massye of Cadueshed, co. Lancaster, and his heirs male; for default to Thomas Massye, one of the brothers of William Massye of Cadueshed, &c.; remainder to the right

heirs of the said Richard. Power was given to raise Dorothy's jointure by another £40 a year if she survived Hamlet, and had issue by him, and remained unmarried. Powers were also given to raise £200 a-piece for each of Richard's daughters, and £300 for each of Hamlet's, while twenty nobles a year for Richard's, and £10 a year for Hamlet's younger sons was arranged for. A further clause to the settlement was added, that if Hamlet's eldest son or heir married without the consent of Hamlet (or, if he was dead, of Richard), that then this heir was to forfeit 2,000 marks to the heirs of Richard. Roger Bradshagh signs this deed, dating it 14th November, 1615. The seal bears, Quarterly, first, two bendlets between two martlets; second and third, three bars; fourth, a mullet. On a helm with mantling is a stag near a tree. (R. 174.) I name this seal because the first quarter is different to the arms given in Flower's Visitation of Lancashire, 1567, where they appear: Argent, two bends Sable, a crescent for difference, for Bradshagh of Haigh, but are similar to the coat given by St. George, 1613.

The Fine for the settlement of the Rixton manors, &c., is dated Monday in the fourth week after Easter, 18 James I, Sir Richard Molyneux, Knt. and Banneret, Sir George Bothe, Knt. and Baronet, Sir Peter Legh, Knt., and Robert Blundell, plaintiffs, Richard Mascy, Esq. and Anne his wife, Hamlet Mascy, gent., son and heir apparent of Richard Mascy, Esq., and Richard Mascy, gent., deforciants of 32 messuages, one water mill, 35 cottages, 10 orchards, 30 gardens, 360 acres of land, 40 acres of meadow, 360 acres of pasture, 2 acres of wood, 100 acres of furze and bog, 100 acres of moor, 100 acres of moss, and 60 acres of turbary, with common of pasture, &c., in Rixton, Glasebroke, Pulton, Fearnyhead, and Warrington, and £1 3*s.* 2*d.* free rents, with all appurtenances and the right of fishing in the river Mersey. (R. 176.)

Mr. Beamont in his Mascy of Rixton Pedigree, already quoted, mentions a deed dated 22nd April, 1624, by which Richard Mascy of Rixton, and Richard Mascy the elder, of the same place, conveyed land to the Mores of Thelwall in (I conclude) Thelwall. A deed was enrolled at Chester, 31st March, 1624, by which Richard Mascy of Rixton, the younger, and Richard Mascy of Rixton, his uncle, sell to John More of London, and William More of Thelwall, his brother, a messuage in Thelwall, the conveyance being for the performance, in part, of covenants contained in certain indentures made by the same parties the 27th March, 1624 (29 Report Dep. Keeper P. R., p. 191), which is probably the sale named by Mr. Beamont, the two Mascys being evidently Richard, the son of William by Dorothy Daniell, and his uncle being Richard, son of Richard by Anne Tildesley, the latter being the "uncle" named in the marriage settlement of 1615, and who died 1633.

Land in Thelwall was named in the contract of settlement on the marriage of Richard Mascy and Anne Tildesley in 1538, and amongst the premises charged with the jointure of Dorothy Danyell in 1572, is a farm in that town, let to John Caldwall at 16*s.* yearly; but no further mention occurs of Thelwall amongst the Mascy deeds.

In the interesting Chronicles of Thelwall, in vol. i. of "The "Topographer and Genealogist," by Mr. James Nicholson, F.S.A., mention is made of the family of Mascy of Mascy Green, in Thelwall; but unfortunately the able writer offers no suggestion as to their pedigree, neither does he give any idea as to the dates when they became possessed of or when they relinquished their freehold. That they were of the Rixton family of Mascys is, I think, pretty certain, and possibly the Mascy Green mentioned formed part of the land in Thelwall which Petronilla Werburton brought to her husband, William Mascy of Rixton, in 1415. It is said that "Mascy Green" passed to the Drinkwaters of Warburton. In October, 1723, Richard Mascy of Rixton refers in a letter to the sums of money which he then owes to a Mr. Drinkwater.

The 5th October, 19 James I, 1622, Richard Mascy obtained, in consideration of £100, a lease from Sir Thomas Ireland of Bewsey, Knt., for 31 years, of the corn tithes of Rixton and Glasebroke, having to pay for the same yearly twelve pence as long as a lease heretofore made of the said tithes to John Ashton of Glasebroke, gent., existed, and on its expiration the sum of £2 yearly for every unexpired year of the remainder of the term. (Rixton Leases, 27.) The tithe of hay and grass Mascy already possessed.

About this date, namely 1621, a dispute arose between Richard Mascy and Alice the wife of William Hawarden (formerly wife of Thomas Rixton), and the Rector of Warrington, on account of their encroachment on the choir or chapel of the Mascys in Warrington Church, the Rector having put a stall or desk, and the Rixtons a large pew therein. The matter being referred to the Bishop of Chester, he ordered the Mascy chapel to be restored to its former condition, the Rector's desk was to be removed, the Rixtons' pew taken away, and the old forms replaced; Mrs. Hawarden and the posterity of Thomas Rixton being assigned the lowest form. (Lanc. Chantries.) There existed, before the restoration of Warrington Church in 1858, a pew, on the door of which was carved, "RICHARD MASSYE AN° DNI 1617," with the arms Quarterly, first, on a bend three covered cups; second, quarterly, in the same quarter, a mullet; third, three birds close; fourth, a squirrel sejant. This pew must have been carved to shew Mascy's "right" to a seat in the parish church as owner of Rixton; a right which the Bishop of Chester evidently recognised, for the family were Catholics, and, as we shall see, heavily fined for their recusancy in the next reign. Perhaps the carved pew door was one of the "forms" which had to be replaced in the Mascy chapel in 1621.

A general pardon under the Great Seal was granted to Richard Mascy of Rixton, Esq., the 20th February, 1 Charles I (R. 177), which was probably a necessary precaution, adopted by many other Catholics at this date. In 1629, Richard Mascye of Rixton, co. Lancaster, Esq., a "convicted recusant," personally appeared at York "before his Majesty's Commissioners authorized to com-"pounde for the forfeiture of the lands and goods of recusants onvicted in Lancashire and other counties," and he then made nposition for himself, Anne his wife, Hamlet his son, and orothy his daughter-in-law—of all his manors of Rixton and asebroke, and of all the messuages, lands, and tenements in arrington, Pulton, and Pemberton, and of the tithe of corn in xton and Glasebroke, "and on account of this appearance hall be free from further disquietude and trouble as a recusant, o long as he pay to his Majesty the rent so compounded for." his composition paper is signed by Charles Radcliffe, chief mmissioner, and dated 12th December, 1629. (R. 178.) Unfortunately, amongst the family papers it is not stated what was e rent he had to pay.

Besides being, we hope, a devout Catholic, Richard was, ssibly, fond of a little sport, if we may venture to judge m so from a carefully drawn up indenture of the conditions for foot race, dated 10th May, 1 Charles I, between himself on the e part, and John Sharples of Freckleton in the said county f Lancaster), gent., of the other, "concerning a foot race, or match to be run by and betweene Thomas Rothwell of Rixton aforesaid, yeoman, and one man shewed and called by the name of Simon Poynter of Freckleton, husbandman." It is greed that Richard or his assigns shall bring Thomas Rothwell, if he then liveth," three "tryers," and one judge, to Kirkham ross, co. Lancaster, upon the 24th day of June next ensuing, efore two o'clock in the afternoon to run the foot race with and ainst Simon Poynter from this Cross in Kirkham to the Maypole Weeton, within the same county, and back to the Cross, "the nding place of the race," for the sum of £20. Richard Mascy, his assigns, being bound to deposit this sum of £20, before the e begins, in the keeping "of one sufficient man then shewed nd chosen to be judger of the said foot race;" so that if it is ged Thomas Rothwell loses the race to Simon Poynter, "the money may immediately be paid by the judger" to John harples. Mascy further covenants that if, after the starting, homas Rothwell, Richard Mascy, or his assigns, "shall willfullie or willinglie caste downe or hinder the said Simon

"Poynter during the continuance of the said foot race, by the "judgment of the greater number of the tryers," that then the £20 deposited by Mascy shall be paid over to Sharples. A forfeit of £10 is to be paid if Mascy does not bring his man to the start. John Sharples is bound by exactly the same conditions both as to the £20 and the racing, &c. This curious agreement was signed in the presence of Thomas Horner, Marmaduke Banister, John Thelwall, &c., is signed by "Richarde Mascy," and sealed with, on a shield Quarterly of four: first, on a bend three covered cups; second, quarterly, a mullet in the second quarter; third, three birds close; fourth, a squirrel sejant. (Rixton Leases, 313.)

Richard Mascy died in 1645, being buried at Warrington, 14th January, 1645. An "Inventory of all the goodes and chattels of "Richard Mascye of Rixton in the co. of Lancaster, Esq., "deceased, prised and vallued by Henry Chiveley, William "Spakeman, Thomas Mascy and William Clare, the 19th daie of "January, 1645," shows he possessed the usual farm stock, corn, and implements; amongst the latter being two coal carts, "one "olde and one new coal waine." The rooms enumerated in Rixton Hall are—"The Chappell Chamber," "The Little Parlor," "The Great Parlor," "The Bride's Chamber," "The Great "Chamber," "Isabell's Chamber," "The Greene Chamber," "The Closet," "The Stearehead Chamber," "Mr. Thomas' "Chamber" (one of the sons), "Mrs. Eltonheade's Chamber" (one of the daughters), "Mr. Mascy's Chamber," in which, amongst other things, were books to the value of three shillings and four pence! "The Kitchen Chamber" and "Richard "Robinson's Chamber." There were also "The Hall," with its tables and forms; "The Kitchen," "The Storehouse," "The "old Kitchen," and "The Seller." Amongst some of the miscellaneous articles valued is "1 bell and part of a clock, 13*s.* 4*d.*" In this inventory no silver is named, and the linen is apprized at £1 10*s.* only. (R. 189.)

Amongst some accounts dated 24th January, 1645, for the funeral expenses of Richard Mascy, the following items occur:—

The church dues, 2*s.*; for making the grave, 2*s.*; for ringing, 3*s.*; the coffin, 10*s.*; for links and chist (?) 15*s.*; to the poor, 5*s.*; for bread and drink, £3; and for wine, 3*s.* 3*d.* Possibly Richard had been ill for some time, as amongst the wages paid to servants is £2 to "The Nurse." There were fifteen men paid as "servants," and nine women including the nurse. There are also receipts dated 29th January, 1645, for £20 2*s.* 6*d.*; and again, 8th February, 1645, for £25, paid by John Piers to John Hampson, "for Mr. Richard Mascy's, of Rixton, composition made "for his estate, 1644." The sum of £44 was paid the year before on account of this same composition. (Tempest Papers, box 69.)

Richard's wife, Anne, predeceased him, being buried at Warrington Church, 10th December, 1636; hardly a month after her eldest son Hamlet. The issue of the marriage were—Hamlet, son and heir, Thomas, and William; with four daughters, Prisca, Elizabeth, Mary, and Anne.

Thomas Mascy, the second son, to whom his father, on 2nd February, 1616, leased the tithes of hay and grass in the town meadows of Rixton, with the hereditaments belonging, for eighteen years, at a yearly rent of three shillings (due to the Parson of Warrington Church, at Easter) and also three peppercorns. (Rixton Leases, 315.) He is stated in Dugdale's Visitation to have been a soldier, and died unmarried in Flanders. His will was made 2nd August, 1622, before he started for the wars.

William Mascy, third son, was baptized at Warrington, 2nd July, 1599; and his father, in February, 1616, secured to him an annuity of 20 nobles out of premises in Rixton. (Rixton Leases, 101.) He married Jane, daughter of Edmund Standish, a younger son of Standish of Standish, and had by her two sons, Thomas and Hamlet, both of whom are named in the deed of settlement on the marriage of Richard Mascy "the younger" of Rixton with Mary Plowden, in 1642. William is in this deed described as "late son of Richard Mascy the elder, party to "these presents," which proves he was dead before 1642. William's elder son is called Thomas Mascy of Standish, where it is concluded he resided. (R. 185 B.)

Richard Mascy's daughter Prisca was granted by her father, the 18th January, 17 James I (1619), a rent charge of £100 for two years as her child's portion. (R. 175.) She died unmarried in 1623, being buried at Warrington the 13th August in that year.

Elizabeth Mascy was baptised at Warrington 20th July, 1601, and married Abraham Langton of the Lowe, co. Lancaster. (Dugdale's Visit. of Lanc.)

Mary Mascy married Edward Eccleston of Eccleston, co. Lancaster, and had by him a daughter, who was buried at Warrington 9th July, 1629. She married, secondly, John Warde of Capesthorne, co. Chester, but had no issue. This second marriage took place prior to 1634, for, in Michaelmas Term, 9 Charles I, an action was brought against Richard Mascye and Robert Blundell by George Warde of Capelthorne [Capesthorne], whose son John had married Mary, the defendant Mascy's daughter, and who had promised her a dower of £1000 upon certain conditions. (Lanc. Record Series Exchcq. Depos.) Some portion of the promised dower must have been money derived from Mascy's Eccleston marriage, as Richard Mascy was only empowered to raise £200 for each of his daughters. (R. 174).

Anne Mascy, another daughter, married Richard, son and heir of Richard Eltonhed of Eltonhed-in-Sutton, co. Lancaster. The 20th April, 13 Charles I (1637), Richard Mascy, acting on the powers contained in the settlement of 1615, granted to Richard Eltonhed, the father, an annuity of £100 for two years (the same to commence after Mascy's death), as the portion due to Anne. (R. 181.)

Hamlet, "eldest son and heir apparent, while he lived, of "Richard Mascy," married, as stated in November, 1615, Dorothy Bradshagh, and dying "in vita patris," was buried at Warrington the 21st November, 1636, having had by his wife four sons and three daughters, namely :

Richard Mascy, the eldest son, succeeded his grandfather in the Rixton estates.

Thomas Mascy, the second son, was born in 1622, and became a priest. He was educated at the Jesuits' College at St. Omers in Belgium, where he studied to the end of "Poetry," i.e., the highest class but one in the course. He entered the English College at Rome 1st November, 1642, under the alias of Middleton (his paternal grandmother's maiden name). He was ordained priest 8th December, 1647, and was sent on the English mission 18th April, 1648 (Fr. Foley's Records Eng. Jesuits, series xii.) He was living in May, 1672, and was then residing in Paris, from whence he wrote to William Blundell of Crosby. In November, 1652, he petitioned Parliament for the annuity of £10 due to him for life out of his brother Richard Mascy's forfeited estates in Pulton, Fernehed, and Warrington, which annuity had been granted by his father Hamlet in an indenture dated 18th June, 7 Charles I, to the following trustees for his use, namely, James Anderton of Clayton, Edward Dumville of Lyme, and William Radclyff of Manchester: the grant to take effect on the death of his grandfather or father, whichever lived the longest. In this petition Thomas's mother, Dorothy Mascy, makes oath that she "intermarried in 1615 with Hamlet Mascy, son and heir "apparent, while he lived, of Richard Mascy of Rixton, deceased, "by whom she had four sons, namely, Richard, Thomas, George, "and William (which William is since dead), and three daughters, "Anne, Dorothy, and Ellen." She further declares that her husband died sixteen years ago, and Richard Mascy the elder, his father, in January, 1645—"immediately whereupon the "manors, lands, &c., charged for the said annuities, fell under "sequestration for the delinquencye of Richard Mascye, eldest "son and heyre of the said Hamlet by this deponent." (R. 194.) Thomas Mascy is also named in the marriage settlement of his nephew Hamlet Mascy with Margaret More in 1662. (R. 201.)

George Mascy, the third son, was born before 1631, but though he is named in the settlement of 1662, I can find no further mention of him.

William Mascy, the fourth son, died between 10th March, 17 Charles I (when he is named in his brother Richard's marriage settlement) and November, 1652 (as his mother's affidavit d clares). (R. 194.) It was one of these two last named Masc who, in 1650, joined the party of Royalists who plundered th Rectory of Winwick, and thereby caused the apprehension an undeserved death of the domestic chaplain at Rixton, the Jesu father, John Harrison, alias Smith. (Dodd's Church Hist. vol. iii., p. 312.)

The Warrington Parish Register records the burial of two sons of a Hamlet Mascy of Rixton, gent., namely, John, buried 14th September, 1636, and Hamlet, buried 16th December, 1637. These are doubtless children of Hamlet and Dorothy, but they probably died infants, as no provision for their fortunes was made.

Anne, the eldest daughter of Hamlet, petitioned Parliament in November, 1652, for her portion of £300, due out of her brother Richard's forfeited estates. In her petition she recites how her father Hamlet, by deed dated 18th January, 1631, secured to trustees for her use this sum. Dorothy, her mother, makes affidavit that she remembers her husband about 1631 making some provision, in the way of rent-charge, for the portions of his younger children, "Ellen excepted, who was not then born." Among those who swore to the signatures of the grants of 1631 was one John Leigh, who states that he is "the rather induced to "believe the name of the said Henry Hill (one of the witnesses) "to be his handwriting, for that the same Henry Hill was the "said deponant's schoolmaster, and did teach him amongst other "schollars to write." (R. 195.) This Anne became a nun in Flanders. (Dugdale's Visit.)

Ellen, the youngest daughter, not born until after 1631, and for whose portion provision was made in the articles of agreement prior to her brother Richard's marriage in 1640, also became a nun "beyond the seas." (Dugdale's Visit.)

Dorothy, the second daughter, married "Gervas Clifton of "Westby in com Lanc' gent", as he is described in the endorsement to the deed securing his wife's portion. In Dugdale's Visitation of Lancashire, 1664, he is said to be a younger son of Cuthbert Clifton of Lytham. Dorothy's portion of £300 secured by deed of 18th June, 1631, to the same trustees hose named for her brother and sister Thomas and Anne. 179.)

Richard Mascy. 1645.

XII. RICHARD MASCY, the eldest son of Hamlet and rothy, succeeded his grandfather, Richard Mascy the elder, he Rixton estates, 1645, being born, I apprehend, in 1619, as entered himself as aged 45 years at the Visitation of Dugdale, h March, 1664.

Articles of Agreement were entered into on 8th May, 1640, etween Francis Plowden of Plowden, co. Salop, and Francis Plowden his son and heir, of one part, and Richard Mascye he younger, son and heir of Hamlet Mascye, late of Rixton, Esq., deceased, and William Bradshagh of London, uncle of he said Richard Mascye the younger, and one specially to this purpose intrusted by Richard Mascye the grandfather," as to e marriage shortly to take place between Richard Mascye the unger, and Mary Plowden, daughter of the said Francis owden the younger. It is agreed that Richard Mascye the unger is to have a marriage portion of £1,700, of which 100 is to be paid to old Mr. Plowden, and £1,600 to Francis, e father of the bride. It is covenanted that within twelve onths after the marriage is solemnized, the Mascyes are to levy quisite Fines and Recoveries to settle the estates, and to cure a jointure of £170 per annum for Mary, with powers r Richard Mascye the younger to raise it by £30. The ortions of Richard the younger's three sisters, Ann, Dorothy nd Ellen, £300 a-piece, are to be paid on the death of ichard the elder. (R. 183.) The Deed of Settlement on e marriage is dated 10th March, 17 Charles I, and is the nly deed of the series that has suffered from neglect, having een much damaged by mice. By it the lands in Pulton, ernyhead and Warrington are charged with the jointures of Mary, wife of Richard Mascye the younger, as well as that of

Dorothy his mother, the widow of Hamlet. The manors o Rixton and Glasebroke, and all lands, &c., in Rixton, Glasebroke Pulton, Fernehead, and Warrington (excepting the jointure named), "the Gatehouse," and capital messuage of Rixton Hall are settled on Richard Mascye the younger and his sons in tail male; in default, on George Mascye, brother of the saic Richard the younger, and his sons; in default, on Thoma: Mascye, brother of George, and his sons; in default, on Willian Mascye, brother of Thomas, and his sons; in default, or Thomas Mascye of Standish, eldest son of William Mascye, late son of Richard Mascye the elder, and his sons; in default, or Hamlet Mascye of Standish, another son of the late William Mascye, deceased, and his sons; in default, on Thurstan Mascye of Southwarke, co. Surrey, son of Richard Mascye, the uncle of Richard the elder, and his sons; in default, on Thomas Mascye of Rixton, another son of the said Richard, deceased, and his sons; in default, on Robert Blundell of Ince Blundell, Esq., and his heirs, upon the body of Joane, wife of William Baysdon, Esq., of the parish of St. Giles', Middlesex, and his male heirs; in default, on Edmund Veale of Whynis Heyes, co. Lancaster, and his male heirs, upon the body of Joane, wife o William Westwoode of London, and his male heirs; remainde to the right heirs of the said Richard Mascye the elder (R. 183 B.) The Fine was levied in Easter term, 17 Charles I, Abraham Langton and Ralph Worthington being plaintiffs, Richard Mascye Esq., Dorothy Mascye, widow, Richard Mascye, gent., and Mary his wife, deforciants of the manors of Rixton and Glaze broke, 70 messuages, 80 gardens, 60 orchards, 1 dove cote 1 water mill, 50 acres of land, 60 acres of meadow, 300 o pasture, 600 of moss, 100 of furze or bog, 1 acre of wood and 100 of moor, with appurtenances in Rixton, Glasebroke Poulton, Fernehead, and Warrington; likewise six shillings and eight pence, free rents in Glasebroke, the right of fishing in the Mersey and Glasebroke, with frankpledges, &c., in Rixton and Glasebroke. (R. 186.) The Recovery was suffered the same term Sir Cecil Trafford, Knt., Francis Plowden and William Bradshagh ng demandants, Abraham Langton and Ralph Worthington, ants, Richard Mascye, gent., vouchee. (R. 185.)

The appearance of the two last-named families in the settlement puzzling, as no relationship can be traced. I have been unable discover that any Robert Blundell married a Joan Mascy, nor es any mention appear of a widow Blundell marrying a William ysdon. At one time I fancied Joan might be a clerical error Mary, the same Mary Mascy who, in 1573, had married a bert Blundell, but as she was still living a Widow Blundell in 3, and her son was aged forty at that date, I can hardly think ikely she took a second husband or had issue by him. The an, widow of Edmund Veale of Whynis Heyes, presents equal ficulties. Perhaps she is intended for the Ellen Mascy, ughter of John Mascy of Layton, who was the wife of Edward ale of Methorp, in Lancashire.

In 1642, the Parliament issued orders that all wealthy or ngerous Catholics should be arrested, and their estates se- estered; an order which doubtless caused Richard Mascy e younger, in his Will, to make provision for his younger chil- en, which he did 14th February, 1643. By it, he leaves to s "well-beloved wife, Mary," two-thirds of the manors, &c., ttled on him to her use during the minority of their son and ir, "that she may employ the rents during that term for the education and bringing up in virtue and learning of any such younger child or children as I shall have at the time of my death, for the raising of them stocks in money or otherwise for their maintenance, and to perform according to her wisdom and discretion." (R. 187.) This Will never took effect, as ary, the "well-beloved wife," died before Richard; being ried at Warrington the 17th February, 1644-5.

On the death of Richard Mascy the elder, in 1645, the tates to which Richard, his grandson, should have succeeded ere sequestered, as mentioned in Dorothy Mascy's affidavit of 52. He was at this date (1645) serving in the Royal Army;

his commission, as "captain of fifty horse in Lord Herbe "regiment," is dated 18th August, 19 Charles I (1643); be signed by Edward, Lord Herbert (R. 188), who, being himsel Catholic, collected many of the same creed to serve under hin

On the 1st January, 1651, Edward Aspinwall of Toxteth, Lancaster, Robert Cunliffe of Sparth, and George Pigott
Preston, co. Lancaster, Commissioners for Sequestered Estat in Lancashire, grant to John Peeres of Rixton, a lease for sev years (counting from the 2nd February last past) of the capi messuage or mansion house called "The Hall, Rixton," with t demesne lands of about 162 acres of the large measure, and o water corn mill, "late belonging to Richard Mascy, but now f
"feited for recusancy and delinquencies," at a rent of £158 a ye to be paid to the Commonwealth. (R. 192.) This John Peere must, I think, have acted as agent for Richard Mascy, as he w much associated with his financial affairs subsequently. He ha become a tenant of two messuages on the Mascy estate early 1640, and the family continued to hold farms at Rixton ar Glasebroke till 1774, when a John Peeres had a lease grante him for twenty-one years of the mill dam of Glasebroke. (Rixto Leases.)

The Indenture of Bargain and Sale, enrolled in Chancery, dated 25th March, 1653, by which the six surviving Truste appointed by two several Acts of Parliament, (one Act bein entitled "An Acte for the sale of several lands and estates fo
"feited to the Commonwealth for Treason," and the other "A
"Acte for the several lands and estates forfeited to the Commo

sions (except those charged with certain jointures and annuities) late parcel of the freehold estate of Richard Mascy of Rixton

ilbert Ireland was to hold the same during the natural life of e said Richard Mascy. The Indenture was acknowledged and ssed the 26th August, 1653, by "Robert Keylway, Master of the Chancery in Ordinary." (R. 196.) On the petition of lice, Richard's second wife, she was, 26th November, 1650, rdered to receive one-third of the income of her husband's states as allowance for herself and children, due since 24th De- ember, 1649, and on the 29th January, 1650-1, a like order was sued. (State Papers.) There is no trace of any settlements ade on this second marriage.

On the 2nd February, 1665, Gilbert Ireland with Richard Mascy f Rixton leased for three years, to Jane Lathom of Erlam, widow, wo closes called the "Ten Acre" and "Strawmeyre," being part f the demesne lands belonging to the Hall of Rixton, (Rixton Leases, 64,) which shows, I conclude, that at this date Mascy was njoying, in right of his wife, her "third" of the Rixton property.

Poor Richard probably found the calls on his purse too many or his means, for by Deed of 12th April, 1658, he assigned to ohn Peers of Glasebroke and Hamlet Mascy of Sankey, yeomen, nd three others, all his personal estate, furniture, plate, jewels, &c., "being in his mansion or manor house of Rixton, wherein "the said Richard now liveth," for the security of the payment of certain debts amounting to £540, for which the said five have stood surety. The Schedule expressing the goods and chattels intended for security shows some improvement since 1645 in the furnishing of Rixton Hall. There are in the "Dyneringe Roome," besides the usual tables and court cupboard, "one dozen and a "half leather chairs": and whereas in the inventory of 1645 only one bed appears (Mr. Mascy's) as having valence and hangings, now four others claim similar luxuries. Some of the rooms in the house have changed names, while a "New Chamber" and "Corne Chamber" appear as additions. Of linen, there were one dozen pair of flaxen sheets, twenty pair of "teere hemp" (?) sheets, besides six table cloths, and ten dozen napkins. There are only 18 silver spoons mentioned; but let us hope the Mascys were not so reduced in this world's goods that this represented the sole contents of their plate chest. We know that in 1547 Thursta Tildesley left his son-in-law Richard Mascy a "gilt goblet witho "cover," but one fears that had gone to the "melting pot" er this date. "One glass case'" is also mentioned in the schedul as being in the "butterie," which one is tempted to wonder a In the stables were nine draught horses, valued at £30, six colts two saddle geldings, two "cloake bay horses," two pad mares and one "pad nag," the whole of the twenty-two horses bein valued at £84. 15*s.* 4*d.* (R. 197.)

On the 3rd February, 1658, Gilbert Ireland of Hutt, in considera tion of forty shillings, sells to Richard Penington of Gray's Inn Peeres Lee of Bruche, and Arthur Burrows of Warrington, th lease he holds for Richard Mascy's life, under the Commonwealth of the manors, lands, &c., in Rixton, Glasebroke, Poulton, anc Warrington. For them to hold the same during the remainde of the term, at a rent of sixpence a year. (R. 198.) Whatever was the reason of Ireland's relinquishing the Rixton property, he doubtless had made a successful speculation out of it during the seven years he held it, as he granted new leases to nearly, if not all, the tenants at low rents, for considerable "considerations," as a bundle of twenty-four of his old leases shows.

A specimen of a Rixton lease of this date may not be unin teresting. I take, therefore, one, dated 20th September, 1 Charles I, by which Richard Mascy of Rixton, Esquire, lets, in consideration of £83, to John Yate of Rixton, husbandman, for twenty-one years, a messuage or tenement in Rixton, "now "or late in the holding or occupation of the said John Yate," with all its buildings, orchards, gardens, lands, meadows, under woods, "libertie to such common of pasture which the said "Richard Mascy or his heirs shall not improve or enclose in "Rixton," right of turbary, with ways, &c., belonging, at a yearly rent of £1. 6*s.* 8*d.*, "together with the yearly husbandlike "ploughing of one acre of ground for oats, and harrowing, "weeding, shearing, and setting up the same acre in Ryders of "eight sheaves between the numbers of twenty-six and threttie

(30) thraves of the same acre, any one of the same severally in their seasonable and due times without any fraude or deceit, when and where the said Richard Mascy or his heirs do appoint the same acre in some part of his demesne lands within Rixton. Also one day's delivering turves, one day weeding of corn, and one day leading muck, one day leading so many sufficient loads of turves as the carts of the said Richard Mascy and his heirs do or shall usually load." Three sufficient rent hens at t. Thomas' before Christmas, four days' shearing of corn with ne able and sufficient workman at the direction of the said Richard Mascy; four days of corn weeding yearly, with one workman for the several and respective wages hereafter following, hat is to say, for a shearer four pence a day, for a weeder two pence a day. Doing suit of Court upon reasonable summons at he Court of Richard Mascy, to be holden at Hollynfare Green during all the said term, or else to be fined and pay fine upon neglect. To grind the corn used upon the farm at the landlord's mill and doing all other amerciaments, boons, duties, averages, services, and reasonable demands (ploughing, shearing, harrowing only excepted and foreprised) as the other tenants and plough-ands of the said Richard Mascy. John Yate is further bound o pay three shillings and four pence for every day's default in hese services. He is also to keep in tenantable repair the edifices and ditches, or be fined three shillings and four pence each default. (Rixton Leases, 3.)

The Assignment of Ireland's lease of Rixton manors to Pennington and the others was evidently on behalf of Richard Mascy; for the 29th August, 1662, an Indenture is made between Richard Massye of Rixton, Hamlet Massye, his son and heir apparent, of the one part, Sir Ralph Bradshagh of Haigh, Knt., John More of Kirklington, co. Notts, Hugh Dicconson of Wrightington, and Richard Pennington of Gray's Inn, of the second part, Robert Birley of Warrington and Robert Ashton of Salford, of the third part, by which, in consideration of a marriage already solemnised between Hamlet Massye and Margaret More, one of the daughters of Sir Edward More, Baronet, deceased, broth to the said John More, and of £2000, the marriage portion Margaret, the Massyes undertake to settle their estates at Rixtc so as to secure to Margaret her jointure, "and so that the mano "and lands, &c., may remain, as long as it pleases Almighty Go "to keep, in the name, blood, and kindred of the Massyes' For that purpose Birley and Ashton are enfeoffed of the manoi of Rixton and Glasebroke, with lands, &c., there, and in Wa rington, Poulton, Fernehead, and Mosscroft. The limitations o the property are for the jointures of Dorothy, widow of the lat Hamlet Massye deceased, and for Alice Massye, now wife of th said Richard. The estates are settled upon Hamlet, eldest so and heir apparent of Richard, and his sons in tail; in default on "Francis Massye, second son of the said Richard," and hi sons; and in default, on "Richard Massye, third son of the "said Richard," and his sons; in default, on Thomas Massye, second son of the late Hamlet Massye of Rixton deceased, and his sons; in default, on George Massye, third son of the late Hamlet Massye, and his sons—"Remainder to the right heirs of "Richard the party to these presents." By this Settlement a provision was made that if Hamlet Massye and Margaret his wife died leaving no sons, but only daughters, that the sum of £2000 was to be divided amongst them; if only one daughter, then she was to receive the entire sum of £2000, on her attaining the age of sixteen years; and in default of this sum being paid by the then owners of Rixton, it should be lawful for her to distrain and re-enter both for the £2000, as well as any portion of it, as also for damages for the forbearance. (R. 201.) The Chirograph of Fine is dated 23rd August, 14 Charles II, Robert Birley and Robert Ashton being plaintiffs, and Richard and Hamlet Massye deforciants of 38 messuages, 36 cottages, 80 gardens, 60 orchards, one dove cote, one water mill, 50 acres of land, 60 of meadow, 300 of pasture, 600 of moss, 100 furze and bog, and one acre of wood; with common of pasture, &c., in Rixton, Glasebroke, Poulton, Fernehead, Mosscroft, and Warrington, with six shillings

nd eightpence free rents in Glasebroke; the right of fishing in he river Mersey and Glasebroke, &c. (R. 200.)

Richard Mascy died in 1667, and was buried the 21st December, at Warrington Church. In January following administration of his goods, &c., was granted to John Peers of Glasebroke, yeoman, Alice Mascy (the widow) and Francis Mascy (the son) renouncing.

Richard Mascy's first wife, Mary Plowden, whom he married in 1640, died in February, 1644-5, and he married secondly, Alice, he daughter of Sir Cuthbert Clifton of Lytham, co. Lancaster, Knt., but I have thus far failed in discovering the date of this second marriage. No papers are preserved to show if any settlement was made on her marriage; and the Lytham Parish Registers extend back only to 1679. The marriage had, however, taken place when Dugdale made his Visitation of Lancashire in March, 1664, when by it there were two children living.

By his first wife, Richard Mascy had two sons and two daughters, namely, Hamlet, who pre-deceased his father, and Francis, who succeeded to the family estates. The daughters were Dorothy and Frances, who were both nuns before 1664. The receipt for Dorothy Mascy's portion is thus worded—"I "under written do confesse to have rec[d] from my nev. Mascy of "Rixton, Esq[r]., the sum of £300 sterling as y[e] portione due to "my coz. Dorothy, his dau[r], for y[e] use and benefitt of her and "her Superiors at Graueling, and in witness do subscribe my "name, Christ. Bradshaigh, April, 1662." (Tempest Papers, box 75.) This Christopher Bradshaigh was a brother to the Dorothy Bradshaigh who married Hamlet Mascy, and was probably a priest. He acted as tutor to the Scarisbrick children.

By his second wife Richard Mascy had a son, Richard, named in the settlement of 1662 as "third son." He was buried at Warrington in 1681, being unmarried. There was also a daughter, Catherine, said in a note amongst the Tempest Papers to have become a nun.

Alice Mascy, the widow, was buried at Warrington, 11th May,

1674. Hamlet, the elder son of Richard Mascy by his first wife, is entered in Dugdale's Visitation as aged twenty-four in 1664, but as his parents were not married until after 8th May, 1640, he could only have been in his twenty-fourth year. He married early in 1662, Margaret, the daughter and coheir of Sir Edward More, of Thelwall, (created a baronet by Charles I in 1636 for his fidelity,) the nephew of Dr. John More of Thelwall and Kirklington, of whom it is related that he was granted no less than five different coats of arms in succession, the final one being Sable, a cross Argent, which his great niece, Margaret Mascy, used. This Margaret More was baptised at Grappenhall, 16th November, 1638. (The Topographer and Genealogist, vol. i, p. 440.) The only issue of Hamlet's marriage with Margaret More was Mary, born in November, 1662, of whom more anon. Hamlet died in 1665, being buried at Warrington Church on December 18th; and as he left no son, the reversion of the estates passed to his brother Francis. Hamlet's widow, Margaret Mascy, long survived him. In November, 1696, she leased to Richard Mascy of Rixton her "part in the manor house called Rixton "Hall, her one-third of the Pidgeon House, stables," &c., and all her portion of the demesne lands at Rixton, namely 115 acres, for the remainder of her life for the sum of £110 a year. (R. 205.) Her seal to this deed bears, On a bend three covered cups, and a label of three points impaled, with a cross. She went to reside with her daughter at Aldborough, in Yorkshire, and was buried at Stanwick, in October, 1704. Her Will is dated 25th April, 1704, "in the 3d year of our gracious Sovereign Lord "James the third by the grace of God King of England," &c. Little doubt which way lay her sympathies! In the Will she describes herself as widow of "Hamlett Mascy late of Rixton, co. Lancaster, Esq.," and names her "cousin More of Kirk-"lington" and "his sister Awthas," also "my daughter, Mary "Meynell, and my two grandsons, George and James Meynell." (Will, penes Simon Scrope, Esq.)

On the death of Richard Mascy, in 1667, he was, on failure of his son Hamlet's male issue, succeeded by his second son, Francis.

Francis Mascy. 1667.

XIII. Francis Mascy, son of Richard, is not entered in Dugdale's Visitation of Lancashire, 1664, although he is named as "second son" of Richard in the marriage settlement of 1662. Mr. Beamont supposes him to be by the second wife (pedigree in Warrington Museum); but I am inclined to believe, from his bearing the Christian name of "Francis," that he was by Mary Plowden, the first wife, whose father and grandfather were both called Francis. The Plowden marriage was "shortly to be solemnized on the 8th May, 1640" (R. 183); it is quite possible, therefore, for four children to have been born before she died in February, 1644-5, and for her to have died on the birth of her last child. Another reason for my considering Francis to have been by the first wife is, that if he had been the elder of two sons by Alice Clifton, the second wife, she would surely have taken care, when the family pedigree was recorded by Dugdale, in 1664, that her eldest son should have been entered, as well as her other children, Richard and Catherine.

There are very few traces of this Francis Mascy amongst the family papers, excepting a few leases granted by him between the dates 7th May, 1669, and 20th October, 1674.

He appears to have resided at Rixton, as, amongst the Crosby MSS. is a letter from Mr. William Blundell of Crosby to Thomas Mascy, the priest (uncle to Francis), dated 25th May, 1672, in which he names, as being amongst his guests the week before "at XB," Mr. Mascy of Rixton; and the 25th December, 1672, this same Blundell writes as follows to Francis Mascy at Rixton—"I "wish you a good Xmas and a happy New Year, and withal I must "beg your lady's pardon in behalf of my wife, who having heard "nothing of her delivery till the month was complete could not "for that reason perform the usual ceremony, which was due to "have been paid at that time. My wife doth now (so late) "present to yours by this bearer three small sugar loaves. I "would be glad to receive a pardon testified by your own hand. "We shall likewise be glad to hear that your little daughter is "well and do heartily wish that you may in good time be the "father of a son or two who may long continue your name in "that antient family." (Crosby MSS.)

Francis Mascy's wife was named Elizabeth, but her maiden name and date and place of her marriage, I have been unable to discover. She married secondly at Warrington Church, 24th November, 1683, John, a younger son of Robert Blundell of Ince Blundell. William Blundell of Crosby, writing of this John Blundell's marriage with Mascy's widow, the 3rd January, 1693-4, says, "He now lives upon a small estate of inheritance which he hath "by that wife, in the furthest northern parts of Lancashire "about 60 miles from hence" (Crosby MSS.) John Blundell, writing 30th July, 1692, describes himself as "of Dalton, co. "Lancaster," so I conclude Mrs. Francis Mascy's property was somewhere in Dalton-in-Furness.

Francis Mascy died 1675, the Warrington Register stating that he was "buried in the North 26th August, 1675." Administration of his effects was granted to Richard Chiveley and John Peers, his creditors—Elizabeth, his wife, renouncing.

Of children by his wife, he had two who lived :—Richard, who succeeded him in the Rixton property, and Anne, "the little "daughter," named in William Blundell's letter of December, 1672, who became a nun, and died abroad. There is an entry in the Warrington Register of the burial of a Hamlet, son of Francis Mascy, 24th August, 1697, but I do not think he was a son of this Francis.

Richard Mascy. 1675.

XIV. Richard Mascy, the son and heir of Francis, was with his sister Anne, under the guardianship of their stepfather, John Blundell, but owing to the non-payment of the £2,000 due to Hamlet Mascy's daughter and heiress, there arose endless money quarrels and suits betwen the Blundells, acting for the infant Richard, and George Meynell, who had married the heiress, and now demanded her fortune. No doubt Margaret More's portion of £2,000 had been received by the Mascys at the date of her marriage, but since then the estate seems to have become impoverished, doubtless owing to the fact that its owners were Jacobites and Catholics, the ruin of many an ancient family in the 17th century.

In 1685 we find the Meynells waxing impatient, and filing a bill at Trinity Term, in Chancery, against Richard Mascy, an infant, and John Blundell and Elizabeth his wife, mother of the said infant, Hugh Dickenson of Wrightington, surviving trustee, Edward Trotter, Esq., Sir Richard Bradshaigh, Knt., and others, claiming the £2,000 and damages, and praying that the lands of Rixton and Glasebroke, &c., charged for the payment of this £2,000, &c., under the settlement of 1662, might be sold to raise the necessary sum. The Blundells for themselves and the infant make answer that, while acknowledging the marriage settlement of Hamlet Mascy and Margaret More, by which this money was secured for Hamlet's daughter and heir on her attaining the age of sixteen years, wish to point out that they are unable to pay the amount. For, though in possession of part of the lands liable to be charged, since the complainant (Mary Meynell) arrived at the age of sixteen, the lands have only been worth £120 or thereabouts, and one year, when they were only worth £90. They also declare that they paid Alice, the widow of Richard Mascy, £100, and also for two years have paid £20 for Richard Mascy. "That the keeping up of the estate had "cost them £300 in necessary building and repairs, and the "reason so much had been expended was, because two kilnes "and one stable had been burnt down, which cost £130 to "rebuild."

Nothing was done towards selling or mortgaging the property, and the charge was paid off by small sums at various dates.

On the 25th November, 1686, George Meynell writes to Hugh Dicconson (or Dickenson) that "Mr. John Blundell claims too "much money for the maintenance of the children, tho' I would "be kind in allowance, when I am satisfied of the care and "method taken for the payment." It was probably in reply to some remonstrance from Dicconson as to the "care and method"

employed towards the children that John Blundell writes on 2nd April, 1687 :—"Now as to last year's profitts of the land, "they were employed unto the immediate use of the heire and "his sister, for I went over at Midsummer and paid two years' "pension for him, the which with the charges of conducting "them thither and fetching the heire back and defending the "land against Mr. Meynell who pretended (as appeared by his "bill) to have it sold; but for your further satisfaction as to par- "ticulars, the children's Diet was sixteen poundes a year for each, "and here is a note under the Mother Abbess' own hand of my "son Massey's other expenses for his first year. I had it when "I went over last and paid it: and for his sister there goes nine "Poundes a year for apparell, learning and other necessaries "which makes up £25 a year; and when I put her into the "Cloister, I was forced to buy her nine changes of all sorts of "Linen (because they wash but once in two months) besides "other chargeable clothes; so I leave it unto you to judge what "I have gotten by the last years profitts. At Mid-summer there "will be a years Pension to be paid for my daughter-in-law (step "daughter) also a years keeping of her brother with me, and I "have now against Easter so fitted him with apparell that he is "in a condition to be sent any whither for schooling, towards all "these expenses I thought you would not have scrupled to have "allowed the Rents and Boones due at Our Lady Day, but Rich: "Booth tells me you will not, and if so I desire faire notice under "your hand and then I will send for my daughter-in-law back "and take bothe the children into Furnes where I can maintain "them at reasonable Rates, and I do not question the heire's pay- "ment when he comes at age for their Maintenance during his "minority. I have spared neither money nor labour hitherto to "do Good for them and if it be not so well for the future, it "cannot be imputed unto me who have but £30 annuity from "my Brother. I observed my daughter in law very religiously "disposed and therefore I consented she should stay a year "longer, and I would run the hazard of paying her pension my- "self, but if now I must teare her from her Vocation and nippe

"as it were in the budd all her religious thoughts and designs, "it will ly at your Doore. So desiring y^r answer, I remain &c." (Tempest papers, box 75.)

George Meynell the elder, who managed the business affairs of his daughter-in-law's portion, writing to William Dicconson (who acted as Trustee after his father Hugh's death, 1691), 13th February, 1693-4, says, "as to Mr. Massey, I am very sensible "that £20 a year cannot maintain him as he ought to be, there- "fore at y^r request I am willing to forbear £30 a year out of "what you used to pay me, untill the young gentleman come att "age, which my sister Massy tells me will be a yeare sooner than "you mention."

From the various papers and bills I have had access to I surmise that Richard Mascy attained his majority in 1695. Neither the Warrington register, nor that of Dalton-in-Furness, where I fancied he might have been born if his mother Elizabeth owned property near, throw any light as to the date of his birth. The glimpse we have of Richard's childhood, through John Blundell's letter, does not suggest much of

"Those joys which childhood calls its own."

Like all Catholic gentlemen of that date, his education was received abroad; far from home and mother; a fugitive in a strange land; trained in his religion and learning (by force of his country's laws) clandestinely!

Amongst some of the accounts of expenses incurred during Richard's youth is a note dated 29th November, 1693, stating that on that day £15 was paid to Mr. Henry Tasburgh for Mr. Massy's pension, "tho' his second year will not be compleat till "June next year." This Henry Tasburgh was of an old Norfolk family, and was superior of the Jesuits in the Lancashire district in 1701. Being the missioner at Ince Blundell, he was doubtless well known to John Blundell, and for this reason entrusted with the arrangements of young Mascy's education, either at his own house at Ince, or abroad.

In 1694, Mascy acknowledges that he owes one "Mr. James Juness "£12 10*s.*, for board and cloathes and other expenses

"the space of about six months I was at his house. Given i
"Flanders at Douay," which points to his being at that date a the Jesuits' College there.

I do not know if the whole of his school days were spent at Doua or not, but on 31st January, 9 William III, a license or free liberty was granted under the Privy Seal to "Richard Massey who wen
"into the French King's Dominions since the 11th day of De "cember, 1688, without License from us or our late Royal Consor
"the Queen and is since returned in this our kingdom without "Licence as aforesaid, to stay in this our Realme of England
"or any other our Dominions." (W. 117.) When Richard came of age he filed another Bill in Chancery, complaining that one moiety of his estate was still in jointure to Margaret, widow of his uncle Hamlet Mascy, and that though £1400 or £1500 had been paid towards his cousin Mary Meynell's claim, he could not more rapidly discharge the remainder. He offered to pay 4 per cent. interest on this; but the Meynells claimed £3000 in all, insisting on 6 per cent. for damages and costs. There is no date to the copy of this Bill, but I take it to be about 1695;
for an agreement was made 20th November, 1696, by which Richard Mascy undertook to pay £1300 to the Meynells before certain dates, and in certain portions, at Skipton-in-Craven.
(Deed, penes S. Scrope.)

With reference to the payment of this money, George Meynell writes to William Dicconson, 26th January, 1696-7, "My father
"would be ready to do anything that might render the payment
"of money easy to my cos. Mascy, but old money at 5*s.* 2*d.*
"per oz. passes not at all with us, for the mint is not obliged "to take it at any price, so others presume to refuse it at that,
"and therefore my father cannot dispose on it." (Tempest papers.)

In November, 1696, as mentioned, Richard freed his property of his aunt's dower or thirds; and in March, 9 William III, he suffered a Recovery of the estates (R. 207, &c.), and commenced to mortgage them; and probably this was done to enable him to discharge the Meynell debt.

He married, in 1697, Jane, eldest daughter of William Fitzherbert of Norbury, co. Derby, by his wife Elizabeth Owen. Writing in May, 1697, to Mr. Dicconson, young Mascy says, "Pray when you see Mr. Fitzherbert give him my very humble "service, hoping very soon to be his son-in-law." (Tempest papers, box 75.) The post-nuptial settlements on this marriage are dated 18th February, 10 William III., 1698, and shew that Jane Fitzherbert had a portion of £2200, and that a jointure of £220 a year was settled upon her. (R. 215.)

The pecuniary difficulties which never left this poor Mascy now began to crowd upon him, and in 1701 we find him mortgaging his manor of Rixton and Glasebroke to Nicholas Starkie of Preston, and increasing the debt next year. (R. 216 to 219.) An old paper thus states his case: "In or about 1711, Richard "Mascy, being greatly indebted, went into the Mint, and the "mortgagee (Nicholas Starkie) entered upon possession of the "said manors and rents, and hath ever since, by virtue of the "conveyance before mentioned (24th December, 1701, and June, "1702), continued in the receipt of the rents and profits "thereof, and no part thereof was received by Richard Massey, "only some small allowance made to prevent his starving." (Tempest papers, box 75.) How sad a picture this conjures up of the last but one of the ancient family! this son whom friendly neighbours like William Blundell had hoped to see born! Well may one exclaim "Sic transit gloria mundi," at the thought of a descendant of the great and proud Barons of Dunham Massey, dependent on the charity of a Preston lawyer.

An Indenture was made the 24th August, 1714, between Richard Massey of Rixton, Esq., of the one part, and Hugh Johnson of Warrington of the other, as to the division of Glazebrook Moss; which declares that Mascy and Johnson stand seized of the manor of Glazebrook, and of all wastes, commons, &c., there, in the ratio of Mascy three parts to Johnson's one part, as into four parts the whole divided. Various parcels of moss ground, "moss rooms," &c., each described, are then allotted to these joint lords of the manor. (Rixton Leases, 325.)

In 1715, Mascy registered his estates at Rixton as a Catholic at £351. 0*s.* 9*d.*, "in possession of James Boyle" (R. C. Nonjurors, 1745), but I cannot discover that he was tempted into joining the rising of 1715.

Richard's wife, Jane Fitzherbert, was buried at Warrington, 8th September, 1704, leaving an only son, Francis, born in 1703. (Tempest Papers, box 72.) He is said to have married secondly, Elizabeth, the daughter and coheir of Sir George Selby of Winlaton, co. Durham, Baronet, and widow of John Dalton of Thurnham. (Baines' Lanc., vol. iv, p. 542.) No mention of the lady appears amongst the Mascy papers.

In Trinity term, 7 Anne (1709), in a judgment for debt, Richard Mascy is described as "late of Rixton and now of "Southampton Street, Middlesex." (R. 225.) He was, however, probably on account of his debts, some time a resident on the Continent. In a letter to Nicholas Starkie, dated 17th October, 1723, he writes, "with great difficulty I am at last got into my "own Country, where I wold most willingly stay if I cold any "ways bring my unhappy affairs to Conclusion which I believe "with your concurrence and assistance might still be brought about. "I have prevailed with my good friend Mr. Drinkwater to wait "upon you with this letter and hope you and he may amicably "adjust all matters without any further Charge in Chancery. "By letting me know what has been paid and what still remains "due, you will in this extremely oblige your humble servant," &c. From various memoranda, Drinkwater appears to have advanced money to Mascy. (Tempest Papers, box 75.)

Richard Mascy died in 1724 (R. 243), but so far I have been unable to ascertain the exact date, or where his death occurred; probably in London. It took place after 18th May, 1724, as the Courts Baron, &c., for Rixton and Glasebroke were held that day in Nicholas Starkie's name. (Court Rolls.)

Francis Mascy. 1724.

XV. Francis Mascy, only son and heir of Richard, born 1703, succeeded to the family property on his father's death, "and,

"though not obliged, paid some of the debts his father left, and "by his will directed that any such as remained unpaid were to "be discharged out of his personal property." He inherited a property suffering sadly from an unprincipled landlord, for, to quote "a case" of this date, "the tenants taking advantage of "Mr. Richard Massey's necessitous circumstances got their "leases renewed for trifling considerations, some surrendered "their leases and took new ones, others took leases in reversion ". . . . and in some of these, less rents are reserved than "the tenants paid before." (Tempest Papers, box 75.)

Francis Mascy cut off the entail of his estates in March, 1729 (R. 234), and by his will, dated 27th February, 1741, directs that his own and any of his father's debts that remain unpaid at the time of his death are to be discharged out of his personal property, and if that does not suffice, the real estate is to be charged. He leaves to his "kinsman, George Meynell of Aldbrough, co. "York, Esq., his heirs and assigns," the manors of Rixton and Glasebrooke, the mansion house called Rixton Hall, the demesne lands, and all lands and tenements, &c., in Rixton, Glasebrooke, Martinscroft, and elsewhere; charged, however, with an "annuity "of £100 a year to Basil Fitzherbert, son of William Fitzherbert "late of Swinerton, co. Stafford, and brother of Thomas Fitz-"herbert of Swinerton." To his executors he leaves £1000, to be applied as he shall direct in writing. To Thomas Fitzherbert; to Edward Dicconson's child, Mascy's god-daughter; to Francis Mannock (the Jesuit father, alias Arthur, who had been chaplain to the Fitzherberts); to Thomas Culcheth of Culcheth; and to Hamlet Clarke of Hollinsgreen, he leaves legacies; desiring also that Mr. John Chadwick shall receive £50, "to be applied as "shall be directed;" probably in masses. The executors to the will are, Richard Clayton of Adlington, John Halliwall of Wrightington, and John Chadwick of Burgh. (R. 239.)

Francis Mascy died unmarried, at Culcheth, the 27th September, 1748. Amongst his executor's accounts as to his death and funeral expenses, occur,—"By 9 servants at Culcheth "5*s.* 0*d.* each (according to custom when any of the family die

"there) £2. 5*s*. To Mr. Blackburn's coachman for driving the "Herst and corpse to Warrington Church, 29th September, "10*s*. 6*d*." The coffin cost £5, the shroud 18*s*.

The marble monument to his memory (fully described in "Arms in Warrington Church," p. 9) was placed in the Mascy Chapel of Warrington Church, by Stephen Walter Tempest of Broughton-in-Craven (one of the heirs at law), at a cost of £15 15*s*., but it was removed from the Chapel some time prior to 1836, as Baines mentions its absence (Hist. Lanc. vol. iii., p. 671). It seems sad it should have been deemed necessary to displace this tribute to the last of the Mascys of Rixton from the site of their ancient Chapel, where, "from tyme paste the memorie of "man," his ancestors had been laid at rest. But fortunately friends have not been wanting; Mr. J. P. Rylands rescued the fragments of the monument from acting as organ bellows weights; and to Mr. William Beamont, that most generous of Lancashire Historians, we are indebted for its restoration to the church wall in all its former glory—one more of his countless thoughtful acts in the preservation of the relics of the past, for which future generations, as well as the present, must ever remain his debtors.

To trace how George Meynell of Aldborough, co. York, came to be "kinsman" to Francis Mascy of Rixton, we must return to Hamlet, the eldest son of Richard Mascy and Mary Plowden, who married in 1662, Margaret More. Dying during his father's lifetime in 1665, Hamlet left an only daughter, Mary Mascy, born in November, 1662, who married, in May, 1681, George Meynell the younger, son and heir of George Meynell of Aldbrough and Dalton, in the North Riding of Yorkshire, and descended from the ancient Barons Meynell of Wherlton, &c. The post-nuptial settlements are dated 2nd September, 43 Charles II, 1682 (Penes S. Scrope of Danby).

We have already noted the trouble which this Mary Meynell's portion caused to her cousin Richard Mascy. She had by her marriage with Meynell, three children, James and Mary, who died young, and George, baptised at Stanwick, 28th August, 1683. This last named George Meynell married, in 1722, Elizabeth, daughter and sole heiress of George Cockson of Colpigs Hill, co. Durham, and it is this George Maynell whom Francis Mascy designates in his will as his "kinsman," and to whom he left his property. Dying intestate a month after Mascy's will was made, namely, 24th March, 1741, the reversion of the bequest passed to his son George, who, dying unmarried 14th January, 1747-8, left three sisters his coheirs, and they, on Francis Mascy's death, in September, 1748, inherited the Rixton estates as such.

Of these sisters, the eldest, Elizabeth, married, in May, 1748, Dr. Thomas Witham of Old Durham, M.D., the second son of William Witham of Cliffe, co. York, Esq.; and she had, as her share of her brother's and kinsman's estates, half the manor of Rixton, with the Old Hall and demesne lands, the Mascy Chapel in Warrington Church, and lands and tenements in Rixton.

Anna Clementina, the second sister, married in 1749, Simon Scrope of Danby-upon-Yore, co. York, Esq., and had the manor of Dalton in Yorkshire. Frances Olive, the youngest, baptised at Stanwick, 27th September, 1727, married, in December, 1748, Stephen Walter, the son and heir of Stephen Tempest of Broughton-in-Craven, Esq., and had as her share, half the manor of Rixton and Glasebrook, with free fishings in the river Mersey and Glasebrook, the Little Hall, Rixton, with its demesne lands, certain lands and tenements in Rixton, Glasebrook and Martinscroft, with the ferryhouse and boat of Hollings Green ferry, over which, from 1765 to 1771, Sir Peter Warburton and Mr. Tempest had much dispute, owing to the former removing the post on his side of the ferry, and demanding that his tenants should be ferried across free. (Tempest Papers, box 72.) The deeds of partition, by which the division of the estates is agreed to and settled, are dated 21st and 22nd April, 1751. (R. 249 and 250, &c.)

Dr. Witham sold his wife's share of the Mascy property to the Patten family some time before the 10th October, 1785, as on that day the Courts were held in the joint names of Stephen Tempest and Thomas Patten. (Rixton Court Rolls.) Most of the Tempest moiety remained in the family until after the death of Sir Charles Robert Tempest of Broughton-in-Craven, Baronet, in December, 1865; who, by his will dated 25th March, 1863, directed that what remained of the Rixton and Glasebrook property was to be sold. Portions had been sold in 1829 and 1854.

That the series of Rixton deeds remained at Broughton, instead of becoming the property of the elder heiress, I attribute to Stephen Walter Tempest's fondness for genealogy, which doubtless led him to guard the papers and prevent their being dispersed; and if so, by his care he has enabled us to trace the descent of the man whose property he inherited, and whose virtues, judging by the inscription on the monument he erected, he so much admired.

On an old map, showing the boundaries of the property of the coheirs of Francis Mascy, is a curious sketch of Rixton Old Hall, which shows it at that date to have been a three-gabled house facing south, with abnormally high chimneys, and having buildings, also with gabled roofs, projecting on either side behind it, giving a suggestion of a ground plan in the shape of a T, the building on the east side being longer, and having two gables instead of one. The "Little Hall" looks much like the houses of the 17th century one sees so often in Lancashire and the West Riding of Yorkshire, having a big square porch running up the whole height of the house, Of course, one cannot be sure these are faithful representations; but as the two houses are drawn carefully (after the draughtsman's lights), I think they probably give a good idea.

One cannot close this sketch of the Rixton Mascys without some remarks on the arms accredited to them, or which they used.

The earliest seal on which any arms are traceable is that of John le Mascy, 1365 (R. 66), on which there is a shield quarterly, first and fourth a mullet, second and third lozengy, over all a fess, and circumscribed SIGIL : JOHIS : LE MASCI. The next armorial seal in the series of deeds is attached to a grant from Richard le Mascy de Rixton to certain trustees in 1384 (R. 82), and bears on the shield quarterly, and in the first and fourth quarters a mullet; around is the legend, SIGILLUM HAMONIS DE MASCI, which points to the seal having belonged to Richard's father Hamon. The descriptions of these two seals are copied from the notes made in 1837 by Mr. Joseph F. Tempest when he transcribed the Mascy deeds. Unfortunately the deeds to which these seals were attached are amongst those that are missing, and therefore cannot be illustrated.

From these two examples one is inclined to suppose that at first the Mascys of Rixton bore two mullets, one of which they shortly abandoned. I perceive, however, from a quartered seal in the Warrington Museum, that in 1597 John Mascy of Layton (a junior branch of the Rixton Mascys) used the two, though he bore them in the second and third quarters.

The sketch of the seals attached to the charters of Richard le Masci de Rixton to his son Peter le Masci in 1400, as depicted in the Dodsworth Collections in the Bodleian Library, shows the arms borne at that date to be quarterly, in the first quarter (only) a mullet; and the seal used by Peter le Mascy, the husband of Margaret Horton in 1406, of which only the lower portion remains, shows it was quarterly, and that there was no mullet in the fourth quarter. (W. 38.)

The seal used from 1438 (W. 47) to 1538 (R. 159), was that of two covered cups crossed saltirewise, with the name MASSY, in old English characters, above. These impressions were evidently from a signet ring, as on two of the seals one can trace the sides of the ring. The "covered cup" appears to have been adopted by the Mascys as a badge, and afterwards used as a crest; in 1467 Johanna, widow of Hamon Mascy, had for a seal one covered cup between her initials. (W. 59.)

The first instance of the quartered arms that I have found on a seal, amongst these Rixton papers, is on an agreement of

1625 (Rixton Leases, 313), where they are on a shield quarterly of four, first, on a bend three covered cups; second, quarterly, in the second quarter a mullet; third, three birds close; fourth, a squirrel sejant. This seal was constantly used for the next two or three generations, but of course shows no tinctures. In 1696 Richard Mascy used the same quarterings, but added a helmet with mantling, surmounted by his crest, the covered cup. (R. 207.)

In 1728, Francis Mascy uses the same quarterings (Rixton Leases, 254); but the next year, seals with a shield bearing only quarterly, Or and Gules, a mullet in the first quarter, and a crest above of the covered cup (R. 234); having a seal in 1730 with the arms quartered, namely, first and fourth quarterly Or and Gules, in the first a mullet Sable, second Argent, on a bend Sable three covered cups of the field, third, a squirrel Gules, with helmet and mantling and crest (R. 238); showing that the Mascys then adopted Dugdale's opinion as to their arms in preference to that of the older heralds, and to the coat formerly displayed in the old painted glass of the windows of Warrington Church.

I am indebted to Mr. J. Paul Rylands, F.S.A., for the following note:—"Francis Mascy, Esq., of Rixton, Lancashire," is the inscription on a book-plate engraved by Skinner of Bath, in 1739. The arms upon this plate are quarterly, first and fourth Mascy, second Rixton, and third Horton, with the covered-cup for a crest. The shield on Francis Mascy's monument, however, displays the arms quarterly, first Rixton, second Mascy, third Warburton (?), and fourth Horton.

The seal used by Margaret, the widow of Hamlet Mascy, in 1696, bears the Rixton coat with a label of three points, impaled with the More arms of Sable, a cross Argent. (R. 209.)

That the Mascys of Rixton used the Rixton arms, putting into secondary consideration the Mascy coat, from the middle of the fifteenth to the end of the seventeenth century, is evident, not only from the painted glass in Warrington Church, but also from the seals I have quoted.

This use of the Rixton coat in the first quarter, which should correctly have borne the Mascy arms, accounts no doubt for the absence of the Mascy shield on the Troutbeck tomb in St. Mary's Church, Chester, and the presence of the Rixton one. At the date of Sir William Troutbeck's death, 1445, this arrangement of quarters would have existed, and it is obvious the designer of the tomb would appropriate the coat usually borne by the Mascys to be their paternal one, regardless of other quarters. The covered cups were used by the Mascys as a badge in 1436.

Benalt, in his Visitation of Lancashire in 1533, allowed the arms of "Massye of Rigiston" (Rixton) to be—quarterly, first Argent, on a bend Sable three covered cups of the field; second, quarterly Gules and Argent, in the second quarter a mullet Sable; third Argent, three birds close Vert; fourth, Argent, a squirrel sejant Gules, holding a nut Or. In other words, the arms as found on the family seals from 1625 to 1728.

Dugdale, however, in 1664, in his Visitation of Lancashire, enters the arms of Mascy of Rixton as, "quarterly Or and Gules, in the first quarter a mullet Sable." It is puzzling to comprehend the reason of Dugdale's change in the blazon of the arms, for "Or," never appears, as far as one can discover, on the Rixton Mascys' shield before.

The arms of the Mascys of Rixton, as they were found in Warrington Church, in 1572 by Sampson Erdeswick, and in 1640 by Randle Holme, were—Quarterly of four: first, Argent, on a bend Sable three cups Argent; second, quarterly Gules and Argent, in the second quarter a mullet Sable; third, Argent, a fesse Vert, between three parrots Gules; fourth, Argent, a squirrel sejant Gules;—and a Mascy coat by itself, of quarterly, Argent and Gules, in the first quarter a mullet Sable. From the coat, quarterly, Argent and Gules, in the first quarter a mullet, being found "in an owld wyndowe" and on the Butler tomb, the position of the mullet being the same as in the early seals, I am led to conjecture that this was the more ancient bearing, and that when the Mascys became of Rixton they adopted the Argent field of the Rixton coat in place of the Or of the Paternal coat, changing at the same time the positions of the coloured quarters. To continue my conjectures, I hazard the theory that the arms were so borne until John Mascy, succeeding in 1502 his brother Hamon, transposed metals and colours and mullet to make a permanent difference; and as such—namely, quarterly, Gules and Argent, a mullet Sable in the second quarter—his son entered them in 1533.

A curious example of a dimidiated coat is used on a seal attached to a lease from William Mascy of Rixton in 1587, namely, first quarter, three birds close; the quarter below, two covered cups, impaled with a dimidiated saltire. I suggest that this seal refers to the alliance between Richard, William Mascy's son, and Anne Middleton, which took place about this date.

Just one closing remark is necessary on the arms attributed to "Pennington." They appear in the notices of the Mascy quarterings, described in three different blazons. Benalt in 1533 gives, Argent, three birds close Vert. Fowler in 1567, amongst the quarterings of Mascy of Carlton, a younger son of Rixton, gives Vert, three falcons Argent; while according to the notes of Erdeswick and Holme, this coat appeared in Warrington Church as, Argent, a fess Vert, between three parrots Gules. Query, Which was correct? Now, instead of these arms being those of a family named Pennington, of whose alliance with either Mascy or Horton there is no trace, were not these birds intended for the pelicans or cormorants of Richard Warburton, whose heiress brought lands in Pennington to the Mascys? There is only a portion left of a seal used by Richard Warburton in 1420, and this shows a stout-looking bird, its long beak turned to the right, (W. 41,) which perhaps represents the form of bird he adopted as a badge, and which may have been used as the foundation to his arms, as the Pelican was for the Warburtons of Arley.

Ormerod finds fault with the arms, "Argent, a squirrel sejant "Gules" for Horton, and states they were the bearing of the family of del Wode or de Bosco of Hassal, who granted the lands in Hertford to the Hortons. But might not the Hortons, on acquiring this property, have been permitted to adopt the del Wode arms as the Bothes did those of the Bartons?

MASCY SEALS.

In the spelling of the name, the family always, down to Margaret Mascy in 1704 and Richard Mascy in 1714, signed as "Mascy"; but in the various deeds and papers the name is spelt in different modes: I have therefore, throughout the foregoing, given the name spelt as I have found it in the several documents. Francis, the last of the line, always signed "Massey."

Subsidy, 1624.

PRECEPTS TO THE CONSTABLES OF WEST DERBY.

These precepts apparently concern the collection of one of the "Three entire Subsidies and three Fifteenths and Tenths" granted to the King by "the Temporality" in the Act of Parliament of 21 James I, cap. 34. At the same time "Four entire "Subsidies" were granted by the Spirituality. The precepts are written on separate slips of paper, with original signatures.

Edward Moore was collector for the Hundreds of Leyland and Salford, as well as West Derby, and paid to the King's Treasurer's £488. 14*s.* 2*d.* for the three hundreds, and had his receipt on the 3rd August, 22 James I (1625). [No. 415.]

PROCEEDINGS,

THIRTY-NINTH SESSION, 1887.

The ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING of the Society was held at the Royal Institution, Liverpool, on Thursday, the 20th of January, 1887; F. J. BAILEY, M.D., Vice-President, in the chair; when the

ANNUAL REPORT

was read and approved of, as follows :—

Little has happened in the Society's life during the past year to call for comment.

In August the British Archæological Association held its Autumn meeting in Liverpool, when arrangements for the entertainment of the strangers, and their conveyance to and from objects of interest in the neighbourhood, were made by the officers of this and of the Liverpool Architectural Society. It is believed that a pleasant and instructive week was spent. In connection with this visit excavations were made at Burscough Priory, by permission of Lord Derby, a record of which will presently appear in our Transactions.

Recently the Society has been so fortunate as to obtain the loan of the most extensive and valuable collection of Charters, Deeds, and Muniments which has ever been seen in this city. It was formerly the property of the Moore family, who, during the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th centuries, lived in the heart of Liverpool, and were intimately connected with the history of the place. These muniments, which have been kindly lent to the Society by their present owner, Capt. Stewart, of Alltyrodyn, Llandwyssil, South Wales, are being transcribed and prepared for publication under the auspices of this Society and of the Corporation of Liverpool, who have allowed Mr. T. N. Morton, our Hon. Assistant Secretary, at present in their service, to undertake this work, for which he is so well qualified. "One copy of the Transcript is to remain "the property of the Corporation."

During the past year seven Papers have been read before the Society, one of them by a new member, Mrs. Arthur Tempest, who has given an exhaustive account of the "Family of Mascy of Rixton and Glazebrook," drawn from materials in the possession of her brother-in-law, Sir Henry Tempest, of Broughton Hall, near Skipton, baronet.

Sixteen new members have joined the Society, and seventeen have died or resigned since the last Annual Meeting. On the whole, considering the powerful rivalry of the kindred societies at Manchester and Chester, in numbers, at all events, this Society has held its own. Each Session, however, it becomes more difficult to get papers to be read before the Society, and the attendance of members at the meetings is still far from what could be desired.

In response to the circular as to sale of back numbers of Transactions, orders to the extent of some fourteen pounds have been received.

The Council regret to have to announce that Mr. Hance has resigned the post of Honorary Secretary to the Society, which he has filled since July, 1884, and they desire to place on record their high appreciation of his laborious and self-denying services to the Society. At the same time a general wish was expressed that Mr. Hance would reconsider his decision, and the acting President (Dr. Bailey) was requested to embody this desire in a letter to Mr. Hance, and acquaint the General Meeting with his decision.
